KALDOR 3

Kaldor is a kingdom in east-central Hârn. The name is also used for the region of the middle Kald River watershed, which lies roughly between the Sorkin and Felsha mountains. The natural vegetation is mostly mixed woodland and forest and there are large tracts of cropland and pasture. Most of the region is alluvial plains but there are several hilly districts, notably the Kathela Hills and the Upper Osel. Most Hârnians using the name Kaldor mean the kingdom, not the region.

Although the region is culturally dominated by the Kingdom of Kaldor, it is home to several tribal nations that range back and forth across the realm's ambiguous borders. Although Kaldor has assimilated large numbers of tribesmen since its foundation in 188 TR, many of the lands claimed by its kings and nobility are actually controlled by the Chelni, Kath, Pagaelin, and Taelda nations. By avoiding open battle, these hardy tribesmen have been able to withstand intermittent Kaldoric attempts at conquest.

The lands of the kingdom's south and west are lightly settled and administered as the military districts of Oselmarch and Chelmarch. In the west, Chelni and Kath lands are crossed by the Salt Route and include some fertile Kald bottomland. Kaldor has a token presence at Trobridge Inn but only because the Chelni allow it to survive. The southern Oselmarch lies within Pagaelin territory. It has a high proportion of grassy, open woodland, giving it higher agricultural potential. The region is crossed by the Genin Trail and subject to Pagaelin raids. Beyond the Pagaelin territory lies small but rich Chybisa, a kingdom to which Kaldor occasionally asserts a claim.

While the kingdom is not entirely safe from her barbaric neighbors, pacification of surrounding land continues. Relations with the tribes are not always warlike; a few hardy miners, trappers, and explorers venture in the wilderness, and tribesmen are a common sight in border settlements.

HISTORY

During the Codominium, the Kald Valley was a center of trade among the elder peoples. Several Khuzan outposts (kygs) existed, most of them now major settlements of Kaldor. The Khuzan bridge at Naniom is still in use today.

The Jarin settled the upper Kald from 1150 BT and this region saw the greatest flowering of their culture on Hârn. The influence of the Sindarin and Khuzdul may account for this. The Jarin fought alongside the elder peoples during the Atani Wars against invading Lythian barbarians. After the Battle of Sorrows (683 BT), the Sindarin and Khuzdul withdrew from the region, leaving few traces except abandoned mines and kygs.

The Jarin of Kaldor assimilated several waves of barbarians. By the first century TR, the bloodlines were so intermixed that, with the exception of the northern Jarin, most people considered themselves Hârníc rather than Jarin or Lythian. Kaldor was a mosaic of fiercely independent petty states like the Kingdom of Olokand, ruled by Locar the Strong.

Lothrim (96–120)

Around 110, Lothrim, the mysterious and charismatic warchief of the Chelni nation, began preparing for his greatest military campaign. In 111 and 112, he seized the tiny Jarin states on the west bank of the Kald and issued an ultimatum to the King of Olokand in 113. When it was rejected, Lothrim led his Chelni mercenaries and gargun hordes across the Hemurin River. They stormed and took Olokand, putting its royal house to the sword. A month later, Lothrim visited the same fate on Merila. His next ultimatum was met with an offer of negotiation and Lothrim conquered the rest of the region without war.

Lothrim's Campaigns

THE FOUR KINGDOMS

When Lothrim failed to return from his campaign against the Khuzdul at Kiraz in 120, his empire collapsed and local warlords seized power. Shala of Eith, who may have been one of Lothrim's lieutenants, founded Tashal on the ruins of Kelapyn-Anuz in 121. Four kingdoms emerged from the chaos: Nurelia (125), Kephria (128), Pagostra (137), and Serelind (142).

The Migration Wars

Between 145 and 177, eastern Hârn enjoyed unusually mild weather. Excellent crop yields and hunting encouraged rapid population growth. When the weather returned to normal, the gargun had established themselves in the mountains. Human tribes were forced to range further afield for sustenance while the kingdoms in the region brought more land under cultivation in an effort to feed their people. With highland gargun pressing the humans of the foothills, the quest for food became an avalanche with the four kingdoms at the bottom. The weather was poor for six decades. Tribes found raiding the kingdoms' settlements to be easier than competing with the gargun. Necessity drove dozens of tribes to combine into hordes capable of stripping whole districts of anything edible.

In 178, the Kath destroyed Hosat, the largest Kephrian settlement in the Kathela Hills, heralding 60 years of starvation, tribal migration, and sporadic fighting that became known as the Migration Wars. Each of the four kingdoms struggled to survive the barbarian onslaught, culminating with them all merging into the Kingdom of Kaldor.

Migration Wars

Nurelia (125–235)

Founded in 125 by Sanric of Clan Ethelyen, Nurelia soon found itself under attack by Taelde tribesmen.

Sanric I	125–140
Sanric II	140–172
Brant	172–207
Lotin the Gray	207–235

When Lotin the Gray died in battle, most nobles considered Prince Brant, 14, too young to rule and offered the Nurelian crown to Kalabin, King of Kaldor. The suspicious disappearance of the prince in 237 prompted a baronial revolt that was put down by Kalabin at the Battle of Olokand in 238.

Kephria (128–187)

Shala of Clan Eith sacked Kelapyn-Anuz (now Tashal) in 128 and then founded Kephria.

The Kath overran the western half of the kingdom after the battles of Hosat (178) and Lareb Hill (187), in which Torbet was killed. Medrik of Serelind seized the remnants of the kingdom. Torbet's young heirs were spared but never allowed to marry.

Shala	128–145
Parogar	145–162
Torbet	162–187

Pagostra (137–184)

Hain of Clan Parlis founded Pagostra in 137. In 182, King Orsin, unable to stem Pagaelin incursions, appealed to the King of Serelind. Medrik agreed to help in exchange for Orsin's fealty. Armed with his father's great sword, Medrik crushed the Pagaelin at Kobing in 183. Orsin became Earl of Pagostra.

Hain	137–166
Orsin	166–184

Serelind (142–188)

Calsten (142–162) of Clan Tane established Serelind in 142, uniting Tanor with the petty kingdoms of Merila, Panus, and Tyannild. Legends recount that Calsten was aided by a great jeweled sword, a gift from King Tarthin of Azadmere.

Calsten's successor, Medrik, crushed the eastern Taelde at the Battle of Noneth in 180. Medrik then united Serelind, Pagostra, and Kephria to form Kaldor in 188, which he ruled until 192.

RULING HOUSES OF KALDOR

House of Tane (188–362)

Medrik of Serelind founded the House of Tane in 188 when he annexed the remnants of Kephria and proclaimed the Kingdom of Kaldor. When his son Kalabin won the Battle of Olokand in 238, the dynasty stood supreme.

With Kaldor united and the last external threat defeated, the people turned their eyes inward. The House of Tane established strong central government, but kings continued to rely on a feudal structure for military security. With so much power in the hands of the barons, Kaldor developed a tradition of conflict between the crown and the feudal lords.

The Kaldoric Civil War (362–377)

On the death of King Maranos in 362, the clear successor was Aidrik II, but many of the barons supported his elder bastard brother, Fierth of Qualdris, who promised them greater autonomy. Neither claimant could command the unswerving loyalty of their supporters. For 15 years, the armies of the two rival kings laid waste to the countryside. Finally, in 377, Aidrik II, acting on treacherously false information about the enemy's location, was caught in open ground by a superior rebel force near Kiban. Several of Aidrik's vassal lords defected and Fierth won the day. Aidrik was captured and executed, allegedly roasted over an open fire.

House of Orgael (377–406)

Fierth the Usurper had to ruthlessly defend his crown. He corrupted the judicial system to his needs and levied ever greater taxes. Barons who resisted his policies faced charges of treason and execution. On Fierth's death, his son Uthred subdued a major rebellion but was later assassinated while hunting in the Forest of Tamor south of Qualdris.

The House of Artane (406–599)

Kaldoric barons, seeking to restore the House of Tane, offered the crown to Aidrik II's only surviving son, who was exiled in Chybisa. He took the name Aidrik III to represent legitimacy and continuity with the old line. To symbolize a fresh start, he changed the name of his clan from Tane to Artane. Aidrik III ruled for nearly 20 years and was succeeded by his son, who took the name Aidrik IV.

Conciliation and compromise guided Kaldoric politics for nearly 200 years. Each time a monarch died, the barons forced concessions from the new ruler, who reclaimed them during his reign. Although the barons would sometimes press their claims in battle, for the most part the successions were peaceful. Many Kaldorans, including King Roloth, perished from the Red Death (559–561). His successors, seeking to rebuild the kingdom, exceeded the traditional limits of royal power. Their deaths were followed by periods of rebellion.

Baronial Revolt (599–603)

When King Iemald died with no heir, 15 claimants waged a confused power struggle. While most nobles pressed their own claims, Haldan, Earl of Olokand, earned a reputation for honesty. After three years of conflict, the Earl of Balim, realizing his own claim was opposed by most of Kaldor's nobility and discerning a rising star, proposed that Haldan take the crown. Haldan accepted the kingship in 603, founding the House of Elendsa.

THE HOUSE OF ELENDISA

Haldan I the Elder (603–636)

Clan Elendsa attained prominence in 407 when Herlan was made Earl of Olokand for his loyal service to Aidrik III during the Restoration. His successors carefully built the clan's influence, in no small part by judiciously marrying into the great clans of Kaldor.

After the revolt ended in 603, Kaldor began 20 years of reconstruction under Haldan the Elder. For the most part, the barons were content as Haldan sponsored a restoration of feudalism and their rights were respected. When he died, only the most cynical failed to mourn.

Haldan II the Younger (636–651)

The second Elendsa king was tutored by the extensive journals of his father. Movement towards traditional feudalism continued, although his reign saw a slight decline in the power of the barons. Haldan II rebuilt the royal government and the judiciary.

Chelebin III (651–669)

When Haldan II died, there was great sympathy for his wife, Imelene, but many were surprised when the succession council selected her instead of their son Torastra as monarch. Torastra was preoccupied with tournaments and wenching and supported the choice. Imelene took the name Queen Chelebin III and inspired a “rebirth of chivalry.” Bards sang of her, people adored her, and knights happily died for her. She died in Olokand during the tournament that still bears her name.

Torastra (669–693)

As he matured, Prince Torastra assumed more responsibility. When Chelebin III died, he had been the power behind the throne for a few years. Torastra wanted to put the flower of Kaldoric chivalry to practical use and a commercial dispute with the Thardic League gave him the excuse to declare the Salt War. He marched west with indecent haste into an ambush laid by the Autarch Aglir, now known as the Battle of Chelna Gap (672). Torastra returned to Tashal and contemplated the “dishonorable” style of warfare his opponent had exhibited. In 673, he set out with a larger, better-prepared army. He routed the League's army at the Battle of Ramala Gap. The settlement that followed won Kaldoric merchants valuable trading rights.

Late in 674, the Sword of Calsten, a priceless and allegedly enchanted heirloom, was stolen from Torastra's treasury. Hearing that it had been sold in Burzyn to a Chybisian nobleman, Torastra demanded that King Balesir of Chybis return the weapon. Balesir ignored him so Torastra declared the Treasure War.

Torastra mustered an army in the spring of 675 and crossed the Ulmerien on both sides of Burzyn. The Chybisians withdrew into the castle. After a three-year siege, with plague and rebellion rife, Balesir surrendered and went into exile. Chybis became an earldom held by King Torastra, but the stolen sword was not recovered. Twelve years later, in 687, Balesir raised an army in Melderyn and routed Torastra's forces at the Battle of Geda. Torastra denounced Balesir as a treacherous churl and never renounced his title as Earl of Chybis.

Torastra sought to pacify the Kath in 689. He built Chelena, a fortified manor, and subdued the eastern Kath. His next advance met with disaster when 40 knights were trapped and massacred. Torastra returned to Tashal, where he died of old wounds in 693. His route, the Torastra Way, is still used by a few traders and trappers, but Chelena Manor now lies in ruins.

King Miginath (693–present)

Miginath was spirited and rebellious while his older brother, Haldan, was alive. At age 20, Miginath took Lesel of Harabor, the daughter of a wealthy mercantyle, as his lover. Lesel was 17 and a commoner. Miginath refused to marry anyone else, infuriating his father. Miginath lived in exile for a few years until the king forgave him. He had two sons by Lesel, Maldan in 673 and Koris in 675; she died bearing Koris. Miginath took the loss hard and spent the next seven years studying in Cherafir in relative seclusion.

When Haldan died, Miginath, the oldest of the three remaining brothers, became heir apparent. He returned to Tashal and undertook intensive study at the Enclave of the Holy Oak under the renowned herald Lady Caniara Dariune. Torastra died in 693 and the succession council selected Miginath for the throne.

Although he suffers from numerous ailments and is often sickly and abed, Miginath has astounded all by ruling for 27 years. He has substantially increased the royal bureaucracy, handing out new offices in exchange for concessions from individual nobles and their clans. He is popular with the common people because he has kept the kingdom prosperous and at peace.

Miginath took Lady Erila Kaphin, the knighted daughter of a Chybisian noble, as mistress in 696. Lady Erila bore Miginath a son, Tulath, in 696, but rumors that she was an illegitimate daughter of Torastra prevented marriage. Erila and Miginath are still together. She has great power as the Lord Privy Seal, the trusted keeper of the kingdom's records. They are a difficult and headstrong couple, given to heated arguments, that, like a summer thunderstorm, create brief misery followed by relief.

KALDORIC SUCCESSION

After a generation of peace and prosperity, Miginath remains one of Kaldor's most successful and longest-reigning rulers. He has the love of most common people and the grudging respect of the nobility. However, because Miginath has not named an heir, his death may precipitate a succession crisis. The succeeding Elendsa clanhead, chosen by the clan succession council, will become the new monarch. Succession favors the eldest legitimate male but is far from automatic.

Miginath has three bastard sons, all prominent in his government. The eldest, Sir Maldan Harabor, is the powerful Sheriff of Meselyne. Sir Koris Harabor is Marshal of the Royal Guard. Sir Tulath Kaphin is the Sheriff of Vemion and his powerful mother is the king's consort and Lord Privy Seal. If Miginath recognizes one of his sons, it would simplify but not resolve the succession.

The Earl of Balim, Sir Troda Dariune, is a cousin of the king. Clan Dariune, Kaldor's second most powerful family, have always supported Clan Elendsa. Sir Troda has his own claim to the throne but has a confidential understanding with King Miginath to leave the choice of heir to the succession council. A blood tie to Clan Elendsa gives the Dariune clanhead a seat on this council. At that time, the Dariunes might press their own claim or simply exercise their influence to ensure a good selection is made.

Negotiations are underway for the betrothal of Scina, the heir apparent of Clan Dariune, to Princess Cheselyne (the Younger). The princess has her own claim to the throne as granddaughter of Miginath's dead elder brother, Haldan. Her mother (Cheselyne the Elder), passed over once in favor of Miginath, is a cunning but unpopular woman. The daughter is equally cunning and far less scrupulous.

Sir Conwan Elendsa, the Sheriff of Semeth, is the eldest legitimate male Elendsa. He holds Etoss, Baray, and Orcale manors and iron mines at Tallor; he is one of Kaldor's wealthiest knights. Sir Conwan's claim is compromised by an inconvenient oath that only the Serekela of Kaldor can annul (see QUERINA, page 43).

The Baron of Kobing, Sir Orsin Firith, is the eldest son of the deceased Princess Lenera. Sir Orsin is a charismatic, ambitious warrior who is the Warden of Oselmarch.

The Baron of Nenda, Sir Erelar Hirnen, is the eldest son of the king's sister Erelora. Sir Erelar's brother is the Lord Chancellor of Kaldor.

Dosyl, the infant son of Sir Harapa Indama and Princess Udine Elendsa, has a claim to the throne. Dosyl's grandfather, Sir Chimin, is the Baron of Getha and the Sheriff of Neph.

Sir Karsin Ubael, Baron of Uldien, married Serli Firith, a daughter of Princess Lenera. His two surviving children have a claim to the throne.

Succession Law

When a clanhead dies or is removed from office, a succession council of clan adults (50% blood minimum or adopted) is convened to choose a new clanhead. Most often, the eldest legitimate son of the deceased is chosen but councils have been known to ignore such traditions. The preference of the deceased, expressed in a will or testament, may be decisive, as might the concerns of a liege. Rival candidates are often allowed to plead their cases before the council. Succession disputes can lead to violence, if not civil war.

Kaldoric Subinfeudation

Kings of Kaldor have generally sought to keep the lands of their tenants-in-chief scattered throughout the kingdom. This reduces a lord's ability to rebel, since his bases are isolated from each other.

As another security measure, the king makes alliances, often by marriage, with his powerful vassals. For example, the Earl of Balim, Sir Troda Dariune, is the king's cousin. The royal bureaucracy is an exercise in nepotism. All of this jockeying for power is a matter of constant intrigue. Only rarely is violence resorted to, and then often in a manner that can be denied later.

Miginath and Erila

NATURAL RESOURCES

Kaldor is rich and fertile. Storms are infrequent and usually of short duration. From the surrounding mountains spring great rivers along which civilization has spread. The rivers power water mills, act as highways, and create natural boundaries. In the spring and summer, millions of salmon navigate the rocky western arm of Tuleme Falls and fill the rivers of Kaldor. Many of Kaldor's oldest laws were created to control access to and use of its waterways. Most valleys are fertile and all the major grains are produced in surplus. Along the fringes of the alluvial river valleys, hillsides are often steep and difficult to plow, but are well suited to sheep rearing. Cattle thrive in some areas, producing hides and vellum, which are major exports.

Mineral deposits are widespread and their extraction is usually profitable. The Miners' Guild has exceptional influence in Kaldor. Miners and their families usually live in villages granted to the guild from the crown. The villages are within the charge of the local sheriff but are directly administered by the guildmaster. These villages of freemen are tempting sanctuaries for runaway serfs and thus a constant irritant to feudal lords.

Nurelia and the Sorkin Foothills

The deep forests and rushing streams of Nurelia and the eastern foothills of the Sorkin Mountains are home to many game animals, fur-bearing mammals, and valuable herbs, as well as their self-appointed guardians, the Taelda. Most trappers and hunters from Meselynshire and Nephshire are careful to avoid known Taeldan hunting grounds and respect their traditions. Trade is infrequent but profitable. The Taelda bear no malice toward strangers and sometimes help those in need. Travelers on the Fur Road are seldom interfered with and those on Noron's Way are left alone.

Kathela Hills

The Kathela Hills, disputed for centuries before and after Lothrim's time, have seen less conflict since the unification of Kaldor under Medrik 500 years ago. Kaldor claims the entire region but despite periodic attempts at conquest has gained little. King Torastra's failed campaign beginning in 689 was the most recent effort. The indigenous Kath resist all incursions, actual or perceived. Trade is mostly restricted to renegade Kath who have been banished from their tribe. These Kath can be a lucrative source of furs and rare herbs, but the risks of such trade are high.

Lower Osel

The area once known as Pagostra is not as peaceful as other parts of Kaldor. Pagaelin tribesmen have little interest in trade or peace, and actively hunt the forces of the Warden of Oselmarch. The open woodland is a patchwork of hilly grassland broken by long lines of willows and aspens along the watercourses. Herds of wisent and wild horses are common, as are gamebirds. The region is infamous for its many snakes, of which only the Osel Gray Asp and the Hârníc Adder are poisonous.

See Hârnmaster Barbarians for details about the Kath, Chelni, Pagaelin, and Taelda tribes.

ECONOMIC DATA

Major settlements listed below produce a surplus (+), demand (–), or are self-sufficient (•) in the listed commodities. Larger settlements like Kiban have greater demand. Tashal demands all commodities. Timber is harvested everywhere and is traded only in local markets. Unlisted commodities like wine are imported from other regions. Kaldor exports grain, vellum, and wool.

The information is derived from natural resources, land quality, and the geopolitical situation. For example, sheep-rearing areas in Vemionshire produce a surplus of wool and related products. Listed under the nearest settlement, metals are owned by the crown and extracted by the Miners' Guild under license. Quarries and salt mines are held from the local lord. Gamemasters can use this economic data to generate realistic mercantile activity.

Markets and Fairs

The bulk of Kaldor's rural trade occurs on market days and fairs. Market days are held in most keeps four times monthly on each Peonian Lesser Sapelah, and daily in the castletowns. Only Kiban and Tashal have permanent standing markets. Fairs are much larger, seasonal market days.

Traditionally, business involving local guildsmen is conducted in the morning while produce and livestock from surrounding manors heads to market. By afternoon, the guildsmen are finished with their transactions and are free to examine the goods available at the market and to hire labor to move the goods they have purchased.

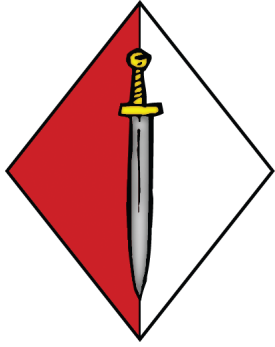

All markets and fairs are carefully licensed and controlled by the Mangai. Merchants display and sell local crops, wool, hides, furs, livestock, and preserved foods. A few stalls have imported luxuries for sale.

Fairs are also centers of folk culture; storytellers and thespians are always present to carry on the local oral traditions. Much more food, drink, and entertainment is seen at fairs than on a typical market day, and religious events feature prominently.

Large fairs include tournaments of chivalry, at which the Laranian Church is well represented. The Royal Chelebin Tourney, held annually in Olokand, is the social event of the year for most nobles.

The commercial life of Kaldor and its merchant class peaks at the great Tashal Summer Fair. Caravans from all corners of Hârn arrive laden with exotic goods and the sometimes exotic folk who transport them.

Harvest festivals are held in every castle, keep, and manor after the fields have been reaped. These ancient feasts are not controlled by the Mangai. They long predate the unification of Kaldor more than five centuries ago, but in many places their Ilviran roots are long forgotten.

RELIGION

The religious climate of Kaldor is dominated by the churches of Larani and Peoni. In most regions of the kingdom, the two churches have tax-exempt status. Laranianism is the official religion of the royal household and worship of Peoni is popular among the common folk. Peonians are disinterested in secular politics but the Church is respected by the Kaldoric nobility, who believe that it helps to keep the masses happy. Other faiths occupy less-favored positions.

The churches of Save-K'nor, Sarajin, and Halea maintain temples in Kaldor but their appeal is relatively limited; they are tolerated but not encouraged. In a few areas of the kingdom, notably Kiban, worship of these deities is discouraged by means of punitive taxes and discriminatory laws, although nowhere are they actually proscribed.

The Kaldoric Holean Church is wealthy and is steadily gaining support among the merchant classes, but has so far been unable to gain much direct political influence; its financial influence is growing despite competition with usurers from Azadmere.

The Church of Ilvir has a major temple in Tashal as well as several loosely organized hermitages in wilderness areas of the kingdom. Worship of Ilvir is declining in urban areas, although it maintains some popularity especially in Meselyneshire, Nephshire, and Vemionshire.

Worship of Sarajin is popular only among a small but faithful community of Ivinian immigrants and Orbaalese traders who arrive with the Fur Road caravan.

The Church of Save-K'nor maintains a temple in Tashal. It has a subtle influence on Kaldoric politics but does not attract many adherents.

Worship of Agrik, Morgath, and Naveh is punishable by death, often by grisly means. Ironically, the covert Navehan temple in Tashal is one of the largest on Hârn; its clerics are well acquainted with the labyrinth of tunnels beneath the city.

CHURCH OF LARANI

In Kaldor, the highest Laranian spiritual authority is the Serekela (archbishop), who is answerable to the Lirrath (primate) of Hârn in Thay and the Sebrath (pontiff) in Tengela, Trierzon. The Kaldoric Serekela is appointed by the Sebrath on the recommendation of the Lirrath and the King of Kaldor. The Serekela appoints local Rekelas (bishops) and sets regional policy.

Most Laranians in eastern Hârn are associated with the clerical Order of the Spear of Shattered Sorrow or the fighting Order of the Lady of Paladins. Kaldor is outside the mainstream of the Laranian spiritual bureaucracy since the headquarters of both orders are in Melderyn.

The Serekela is one of the largest landholders in Kaldor and the Rekelas under him are powerful secular lords. Each Rekela is responsible for the affairs of the church within his diocese and is answerable to the Serekela. The Serekela does not administer a diocese and the estates controlled by his office are independent of the diocese they lie within. The four dioceses, Nurez, Serelind, Kephros, and Pagostra, have borders that approximate the four kingdoms that predated Kaldor. Description of church holdings begins on KALDOR 53.

FOOD AND DRINK

Local cuisine is determined by agriculture and the seasonal fish spawning in rivers and streams. Peasants subsist on coarse barley and oat bread and a barley pottage or soup of white beans and kale or spinach. Chickens and ducks are kept by many households and often end up in the pot for special occasions. Almonds, walnuts, hazelnuts, and chestnuts are widely grown and appear in many recipes, both savory and sweet.

Hunting is very common and good hunting areas are readily accessible. Nobles consume large quantities of game. Beef is a common supplement in the south and pork is common in the northern shires. Swine are commonly used to root for truffles. Mushrooms figure prominently in local cuisine.

By ancient law, fishing in rivers within crown land is free to everyone each Peonian Lesser Sapeleh during the salmon spawning month of Larane. A fishing license is otherwise required, available from the hundred bailiff or warden. Noble households are great consumers of imported black pepper, cumin, sandalwood, and other spices despite their great cost. Wines are uncommon in most households, but mead and ales are used liberally when entertaining. The most popular ale throughout Kaldor is Haniale, a piney nut-brown brew, bittered with fresh spring buds from the Sorkin Spruce. Nobles enjoy imported spirits, but these exceed the purses of most folk. Chives, dill, parsley, and marjoram are grown in vegetable plots.

Kaldoran salters produce several local varieties of cheese from sheep and goat milk. Cheeses, sausages, and other preserved foods are shunned by some among the nobility as proof that they can get fresh food on demand. Much cheese is consumed by monks, teamsters, and caravan guards.

Wealthy nobles often import cooks from Melderyn. Many guildsmen, eager to emulate their social superiors, have adapted Melderyni recipes to local ingredients. Meats with thick sauces, grilled fish served over beds of herbs, and roasted game are popular. Many foods are pickled in a barrel of barley-malt vinegar, then sweetened with honey.

Entertainment

Kaldor is home to many outstanding troupes of thespians and traveling harpers. The long peaceful prosperity and many tourneys and fairs make good opportunities for entertainment; competition is fierce. Most castletowns have at least one company of guilded thespians based locally or in a nearby manor. A typical company of guilded thespians includes 12 to 20 actors, acrobats, and unguilded musicians, plus hired teamsters and laborers to care for the animals and maintain the gaily painted wagons and other equipment used to bring a little joy to the daily lives of common and noble folk alike.

Storytelling is an advanced art in Kaldor, especially among those of Jarin descent. Skilled storytellers make heavy use of alliteration and meter, reserving rhyme for courtly lays. While many guilded harpers are also storytellers, there are no guild restrictions on this ancient art.

Guilded harpers make and use all common instruments and these can be purchased in most settlements. Folk musicians are especially fond of reed and string instruments, especially shepherd's pipes and simple traveling harps.

Vocal music is usually a solo plainchant or a duet between a man and a woman. The ability to improvise lyrics is esteemed more highly than tonal beauty.

R

CLOTHING AND DRESS

Clothing styles in Kaldor are heavily influenced by its abundance of wool, its location at the junction of major trade routes, and its distance from other civilized lands.

Kaldor's well-developed wool industry produces a vast array of woven materials in many colors but most of the cloth is finished in the heavily populated interior area between Tashal, Ternua, and Kiban. The folk of the outer shires seldom see the fine woolens produced from the wool they shear and spin.

The court of King Miginath is intensely competitive and courtiers strive to wear the finest cloth they can produce or acquire through their holdings and connections. A maze of unrecorded rules makes it easy for outsiders and others to become objects of ridicule. Furs are very common but some are customarily restricted to certain social strata, genders, occupations, or offices. The same is true of the many imported and locally produced dyes. The feathers of certain gamebirds are used as ornament among the Peonian and Ilviran clergy but are otherwise considered strictly barbarian accouterments, certain to provoke derision from one's peers and betters.

Unlike clothing, there are few durable traditions regarding hair. Most women adorn their hair in some way, from elegant jeweled silver pins and chains worn by great ladies to colorful ribbons and flowers common at country fairs and festivals. Khuzan jewelry is relatively common in Kaldor compared with other Hârníc kingdoms and Sindarin wares are not unknown.

Perfumes are more common among women than men. They are never used in the amounts seen in western Hârn.

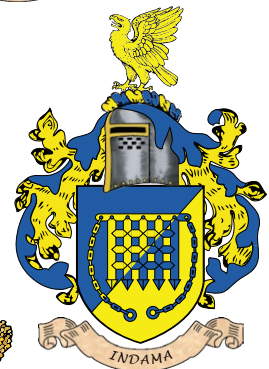

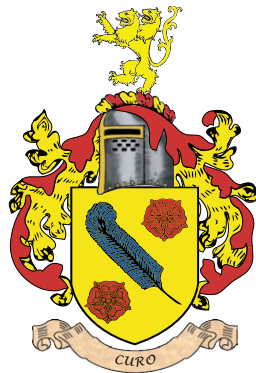

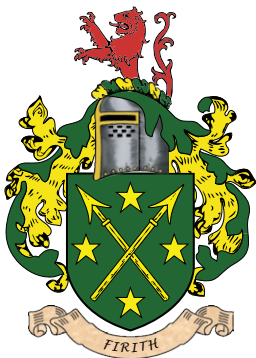

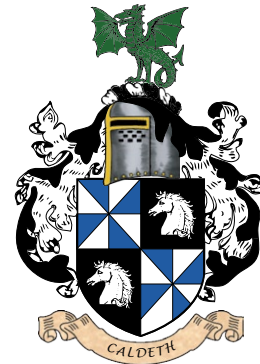

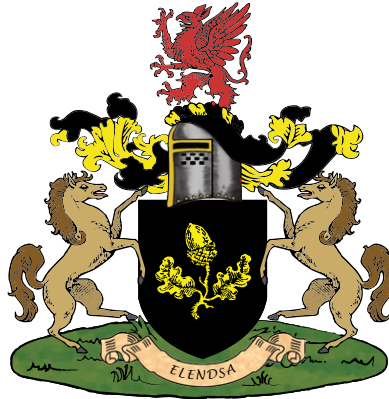

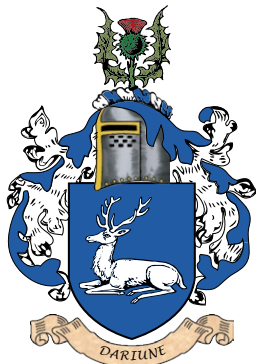

Unlike the relentlessly hostile Pagaelin, the Taelda and the Kath trade furs, herbs, and musk for civilized goods. Additional furs and musk are acquired from the reclusive fenlanders, as are rare herbs and fungi used in dyes and medications.

The folk of the outer shires often wear wide-brimmed sheepskin hats and cloaks of undyed wool. Shalleysticks, elaborately carved wooden walking-sticks, are common among travelers in the hilly sheep country.

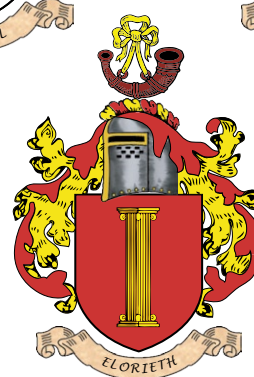

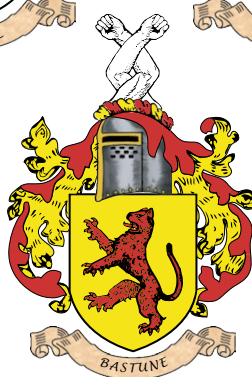

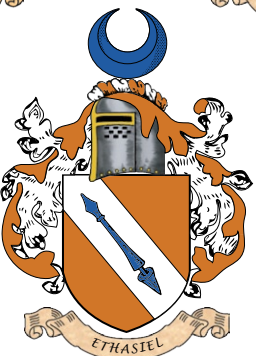

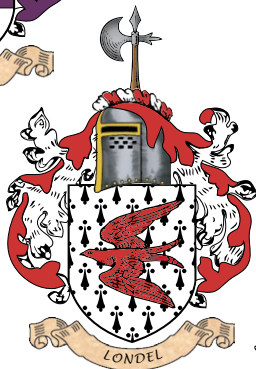

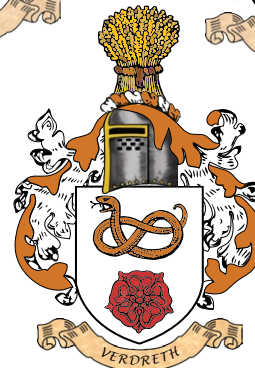

Despite its long history, Kaldor is still, in many respects, a frontier society, not nearly as class-conscious as southern Melderyn. Most folk favor bright colors but only guildsmen and the nobility can afford some of the more brilliant greens, yellows, and blues available. King Miginath has greatly increased interest in local dye making by instituting an annual award for the best color, judged by the Clothiers' Guild. Last year's winner, a deep mossy green from Minarsas, is in great demand.

Outside the king's court, the nobility are not flamboyant. They are more likely to spend their money on expensive Khuzan armour and weapons than imported finery. Laws against production of counterfeit Khuzan goods are enforced; production of arms bearing the marks of a Khuzdul weaponcrafter clan is punishable by death in the gibbet.

GENEALOGY OF CLAN ELENDSA

ROYAL GOVERNMENT

The royal government is an extension of the royal household and most of its senior officers travel with the king. The monarch personally appoints the Chancellor, Chamberlain, Exchequer-Royal, Lord Privy Seal, Sheriffs, Wardens, and Marshals. All are members of the Privy Council that meets to advise the king.

Department heads usually choose their own subordinates. There is a great deal of bribery and political maneuvering to obtain positions in the royal service. Patronage is not deemed improper unless it is against the interests of the crown. Members of the royal court travel with the king and receive at least some accommodation at the expense of his host.

The table below outlines the structure of the government in Kaldor. Offices and monthly salaries are shown. Holders of major offices are in italics.

CHAMBER: The Lord High Chamberlain, Princess Meliem Elendsa, is responsible for the royal household. She exercises great power by controlling access to the king.

CHANCERY: The Lord Chancellor is Sir Tarkin Hirnen, the younger brother of Baron Hirnen of Nenda. Responsible for the judiciary of the kingdom, he presides over the chancery court, the highest below that of the king. Two key lieutenants are the Lord Advocate and Inquisitor General, both skilled litigants. The Lord Privy Seal keeps the Great Seal of Kaldor and all written documents of the Privy Council and King Miginath. No document is official unless marked with the Great Seal.

EXCHEQUER: The Exchequer Royal, Sir Troda Dariune, is the chief financial officer of Kaldor. His responsibilities include the collection of royal revenues (through the sheriffs) from the shires. He also presides over the royal mint in Tashal and advises the king on budgetary matters. Sir Troda is also the powerful Earl of Balim.

SHIRES & HUNDREDS

Kaldor is divided into seven shires, each sub-divided into hundreds. These judicial divisions are unrelated to the feudal subinfeudation of land. The shire moot is shown below each shire name.

Each shire is administered by a sheriff. These officials are appointed by the king and are answerable to the Exchequer Royal for financial matters and the Lord Chancellor for judicial matters. Each sheriff commands at least a keep, which is a royal stronghold and residence.

Sheriffs have enormous power arising from their judicial and taxation rights. They are powerful nobles but have no hereditary claim to their title. In Kaldor, sheriffs and their underlings receive salaries and are expected to pass all shire revenue up to the Exchequer. A counting of shire revenue is notoriously inaccurate.

The sheriff appoints a bailiff to administer local justice in each hundred. The main settlement (which may differ from the hundred moot) is given under Market. Forest hundreds are largely unpopulated. See the next two pages for details.

The Marches

Oselmarch and Chelmarch are regions that might one day become shires but are not yet sufficiently populated or secure. They are under the military government of wardens, who are responsible to the king. See MILITARY RESOURCES on page 21 for details.

FOREST HUNDREDS

Kaldor's unpopulated regions are administered by forest wardens with assistance from paid royal foresters. The wardens are charged with protecting and exploiting resources for the benefit of the crown. Although forest wardens are answerable to the sheriff, in practice they are the sole arbiters of law and order within their hundreds. Poachers may be captured and bound over to the sheriff for justice but it is not uncommon for a forest warden to resolve the issue directly.

Arien Forest, Meselyneshire

King Fierth afforested the oak forest of Arien as a royal hunting preserve in 379. Three manors were abandoned and scores of serfs were forcibly relocated. Harsh laws were instituted to protect all game for the king's table, particularly the abundant wild pig. Most monarchs until Haldan the Elder hunted in Arien, but the more recent Elendsa kings have favored the carefully managed Malvern Wood on the Nephén River.

Calushid Forest, Semethshire

The entire rugged and hilly Calushid Forest is west of the rocky Calusha River, well within the territory of the Aka-Huka and Aka-Pazi Kath, who jealously protect it. The high meadows of Mount Bodari are home to an extended shepherding clan that tends flocks eastward into Endrunel Hundred, where they trade with mercantylers and trappers from Heru on the southern bank of the Kald. Numbering no more than 200, they are mistrusted by both Kaldor and the Kath.

Dunam Forest, Semethshire

The rough foothills of Dunam Forest hold a mix of light woods of alder and oak dotted with box canyons and steep ravines treacherous to mounted knights. Part of the region is contested Kath land and is patrolled by the army of the Chelmarch. Dunam is rich in boar and deer and contains the ruins of Chelena, a fortified manor destroyed by the Kath in 689.

Fyaslor Forest, Nephshire

Fyaslor Forest is an oak and pine woodland, thinned along the Shem River, but otherwise unspoiled. Bromela, an ancient Sindarin Taur-im-Aina, lies 20 feet beneath the waters of Lake Valona. The forest warden is the Serolan of Ascur Abbey, which is often visited by Serekela Edine Kynn.

Hemura Forest, Meselyneshire

Hemura Forest is a vast wilderness that was once a march of the Kingdom of Nurelia. It has not been civilized since the Migration Wars. The Taelda control the northern forest, the Kath the south, and the Gargun of Gifuso lie between the two. Kaldoric authority does not extend far beyond the Fur Road. The Sheriff of Meselyne is charged with patrolling the Fur Road to the edge of the kingdom. The Baron of Tonot has petitioned the king to make the area the Taeldamarch with him as warden.

Kanir Forest, Nephshire

The dark and forbidding Kanir Forest borders the Sorkin Mountains at the farthest edge of the kingdom. A wild and pristine area inhabited by Taelda and Gargun, much of the region is unknown to civilized Kaldor. Dense Sorkin Spruce and mossy ancient oaks cover much of Kanir, divided by rushing streams and rocky granite outcroppings. The Miners' Guild has sponsored a few unsuccessful expeditions for silver deposits. None have been undertaken since several miners were crushed by a huge boulder somehow dislodged from a stable hillside.

Kirsta Forest, Nephshire

The area that now separates Gardiren from the rich Nephén River valley was a settled part of Serelind and then Kaldor until the time of Fierth. The ancestral home of Clan Tane is here, but few traces remain. Pine, cedar, oak, ash, and maple all grow among the few extant ruins and the area is plagued by wolves. The current forest warden, Sir Dergil Selekos, Lord of Zernoll Manor, is a venal opportunist with a promising future.

R04

Kythlim Forest, Vemionshire

The great foggy swamp on the south bank of the Nephen River is home to the secretive fenlanders and a few escaped serfs who have fled here. Sir Bemyr Losrath, Bailiff of Talence, is also the forest warden. He is friendly with these masterless people and has grown wealthy trading metal goods for furs and musk.

Lonemor Forest, Balimshire

Cloaked in perpetual mist, the mixed oak, birch, and cedar forests of Lonemor were once a favored winter hunting ground of Kaldor's monarchs. The discovery of a third deposit of iron in the area has resulted in several expeditions by the Miners' Guild and some of the ancient oaks are falling victim to the axe. The eastern part of the region is home to a small band of outlaws, led by Gradel of Cassan, a Kiban miscreant with a wooden hand.

Meralace Forest, Meselyneshire

The spruce and fir covered hills of Meralace were once the contested border of three pre-Lothrim petty states. Among ancient battlefields are the remains of two Jarin forts and an active salt mine. The Taelda believe the battlefields are haunted and avoid them. The Sheriff of Meselyne holds three manors on the road to Gardiren.

Mylelim Forest, Vemionshire

The willows, elms, and maples of the low, marshy Mylelim Forest are strangled by thick walls of thorny brier. Timberwrights and charcoalers are active here but Mylelim is not well patrolled aside from its eastern edge. The warden is Sir Athyn Ewanth, Bailiff of Ilym, whose father was slain at the hands of Clan Losrath in a duel on the Naniom Bridge. The clans now nurture a bitter feud.

Orsinal Forest, Oselshire

The grassy, scrub-covered hills of Orsinal between Kobing and Halaina Abbey are populated by herds of cattle and sheep. The area is occasionally swept by fires set by Pagaelin tribesmen to drive herds into ambushes. Maerin is the site of a abandoned Sindarin village on the northwest shore of Lake Algora. Sindarin legends refer to a nearby Taur-im-Aina.

Peihlne Forest, Oselshire

Peihlne Forest covers the southeast tip of Oselshire. Much of it is tall grassland that is home to wild horses, wild cattle, gamebirds, and snakes. Willow and alder grow along the watercourses. Most of the hundred is within the range of the Imlox Pagaelin. Warden Firith generally sends his two elite companies of light horse, equipped with round shields, long-spears, and shortbows, against the Imlox and other Pagaelin.

Remil Forest, Oselshire

The rough Remil Forest is contested by the Pagaelin, Oselmarch army, and several gangs of bandits. The rolling plains are carpeted with waist-high grass that easily hides the Pagaelin who prey upon Genin Trail caravans and Oselmarch patrols. Wild horses run free, hunted by wolves and humans. See KOBING, page 34.

Rumerill Forest, Vemionshire

Rumerill Forest extends north and east from Nenda into the Sorkin Mountains. The mixed coniferous forest lies untouched by axe or plow, and some of the towering trees were already old in the waning days of the Codominium. The precipitous eastern slope of the Rumerill Ridge is home to several Yelgri colonies.

Semethe Forest, Semethshire

The forbidding Semethe Forest and its Kathela Hills are home to the Kath. Dense woodlands and steep terrain make much of the area impenetrable on horseback. The Chelmarch Army seldom leaves the Salt Route in this area. Huge numbers of wild pigs grow fat on the abundant acorns, hickory nuts, and chestnuts. Competition for these succulent beasts is the usual cause of conflict between the weary Salt Route caravans and the Kath whose home they stagger through.

Thicesund Forest, Vemionshire

The Thicesund Forest lies between the Nephen and Selene rivers, from the Naniom Bridge to Azadmere. The old stone bridge is of Khuzan origin. The high-canopied hardwood forest is home to a small company of Uthriem Roliri, who protect caravans on the Silver Way as long as they do not tarry or stray.

Valdrun Forest, Vemionshire

Deciduous woodland covers much of Valdrun Forest, while its grassy meadowlands are home to large flocks of Halaina Abbey's sheep and the wolves that prey on them. East of the Vemion Gap, ancient Jarin kings slumber in burial mounds now hidden under the densely forested Valdrun Downs, their legends forgotten by all save the Ilme. A band of Gargu-hyeka with a queen recently colonized a cave in the Salika Valley northwest of Tontury Lake.

Yalten Hania Forest, Nephshire

The pine and spruce forest of Yalten Hania is a rugged area; only the roads are well patrolled and the rest lies untouched by civilized hands. Timberwrights and charcoalers work along the Shem River near Gardiren but seldom venture within the Taelda range to the east.

The Feudal Levy

The feudal levy consists of knights and yeomen who hold lands in exchange for military service of 30 to 90 days per year. Typically, each manor provides one knight (heavy or medium horse), one squire (medium or light horse), and a number of yeomen that varies by troop class and Gross Acres.

Light Foot (LF) = Gross Acres ÷ 300

Medium Foot (MF) = Gross Acres ÷ 600

Shortbow (SB) = Gross Acres ÷ 600

EXAMPLE: The knight of Touvant Manor (HERU), has 2220 acres and thus owes 1MF (himself), 1LH (a squire), plus five yeomen (2MF and 3LF) and scutage for 120 acres.

Fiefs can also muster a militia force roughly equal to their households for defense only.

Guard/Garrisons

Major settlements have a permanent garrison of light foot. The number of companies is given on the table above; some wealthy lords prefer medium foot or shortbow in place of light foot. Many lords foresee conflict over the pending succession and few garrisons are understrength.

MILITARY RESOURCES

The king maintains three permanent bodies of troops, supported by the Royal Treasury. Additional forces are raised by the feudal levy.

The Royal Guard

This elite force is commanded by Sir Koris Harabor, a bastard son of the king. Charged with protecting the royal household, the Royal Guard has two companies of High Guard and four of Low Guard.

The High Guard, two companies (four squadrons) of knights-bachelor, are among the finest knights in the kingdom. One company travels with the king and the other precedes the king to his next residence to see that everything is in order.

The Low Guard is four companies of well-equipped medium foot. Two companies travel with the king and two companies supplement the defense of Tashal or other crown holdings according to a schedule known only to Sir Koris. Sometimes a company is detached to bolster a key military unit or escort an important person.

Army of the Chelmarch

The Army of the Chelmarch is a permanent force of four companies: one medium foot, one light foot, one shortbow, and one light horse. The feudal levy increases these forces in summer, adding at least two squadrons of medium horse. These forces mainly patrol the Salt Route, defending caravans against brigands and tribesmen. Brigands are the greater threat. Young soldiers are often assigned to the Chelmarch for experience before being transferred to the more violent Oselmarch. The Warden of Chelmarch is King Miginath; the Deputy Warden is Sir Korus Ynel, headquartered at Kathane Manor.

Army of the Oselmarch

The Army of the Oselmarch is a permanent force of one company of light foot, one company of medium foot, and two companies of elite light horse. The feudal levy increases these forces in summer, adding at least two companies of shortbow and two squadrons of medium horse. Although charged with patrolling the vast Oselmarch, the force largely stays near the Genin Trail. Conflict with the Pagaelin is constant and brutal. The Pagaelin habitually torture or mutilate prisoners, and soldiers of Kaldor are often equally merciless. Warden Orsin Firith, the Baron of Kobing, is a charismatic leader. See KOBING, page 34.

ATHELREN [K5] 1*Tishilan Hundred, Vemionshire, 275

The shiremoot of Vemionshire was built in the first century by the early Jarin kingdom of Arwn and rebuilt in 250. Athelren has long been an important center of parchment and vellum manufacture, and the annual Athelren Fair draws lexicographers from across the kingdom and beyond. Wild horses and wild cattle roam the grassy Tishilan Flats to the south. Soapstone is quarried nearby.

Sir Tulath Kaphin was appointed sheriff two years ago to the disappointment of many local nobles who felt better qualified. He is the unacknowledged youngest bastard son of King Miginath by the mysterious Lady Erila Kaphin. Charming and optimistic, Sir Tulath, 24, lives extravagantly and is deep in debt to Danzys of Cuke, a local mercantyle. The sheriff firmly believes he will one day be king and his debts will then be paid by the Royal Treasury.

The sheriff considers Danzys of Cuke a friend and seeks his counsel in economic matters. This deepens the resentment of local nobles, especially those opposed to the growing influence of the merchant class.

Sir Tulath is married to Lady Elana Verdreth, middle daughter of the Baron of Ternua. His father-in-law cannot tolerate "the lad's shallowness and relentless opportunism." His family prays for Larani to grant him some maturity.

The grumblings of his in-laws and protestations of the local gentry are unlikely to have any effect on his tenure as sheriff. Nonetheless, he has many peers who long to see him fail and few supporters beyond his wife and mother.

Last year's renovations of the ancient keep's chapel uncovered a mysterious scroll hidden in a brass tube. The arcanist hired to decipher it was charged with secrecy, but already rumors have surfaced of a lost Arwn royal treasure. Any treasure in the keep belongs to the king, so the impoverished sheriff is desperate to keep the discovery secret. He recently imprisoned the arcanist on a charge of "betraying the king's peace."

BASETA [J4] Allence Hundred, Meselyneshire, 660

Remote Baseta is held by constable Eres Tereneth for Earl Caldeth of Minarsas. The keep was built around 140, before the Migration Wars.

Baseta is a river port on the edge of Taelda lands. The settlement has a large urban population, mostly refugees from the Jarin Rebellion in Orbaal (701–03). The hunting is excellent and Sir Eres goes to great lengths to stay on good terms with his barbarian neighbors. He encourages the trade of civilized goods, excluding weapons, in exchange for furs and the herbs and medicines for which the Taelda are renowned.

Sir Eres is a robust and jolly widower of middle years, said to keep one of the finer tables and cellars in Meselyne. He hosts frequent hunting parties that are always well attended by the local nobility. His current mistress, Wilia of Margant, is the daughter of a vassal lord and young enough to be his own daughter. She is an outrageous flirt but loyal to Sir Eres.

The merry atmosphere of the constable's court has been disturbed by his son. Once a fine jousting champion, Sir Miren recently returned from the Solari Crusades on the Melderyni frontier a changed man. He avoids his father's festivities, preferring long solitary rides through the countryside. Sir Eres neither understands nor approves of the change in his son.

Recently, a series of horrific murders has jolted the constable into action. Every month for the past year, at least one individual has disappeared from a nearby village. Bodies are found with the liver, lungs, and heart absent. Rumors of a man-eating wolf or even a lycanthrope have terrified the community and strained relations with the Taelda. There is hushed gossip in the local inns of an even fouler, more ancient entity. Sir Eres has asked the Bailiff of Allence Hundred at Dabell to investigate and resolve the problem.

BIDOW [J4] Dobraine Hundred, Nephshire, 420

Bidow is held for the king by Sir Chimin Indama, Sheriff of Neph and Baron of Getha. Sir Chimin leaves many of his sheriff's duties to his son, Sir Harapa, 22.

Sir Harapa is married to Princess Udine Elendsa, a niece of the king. His infant son, Dosyl, has a claim to the throne. Cut from the same cloth as his father, Sir Harapa leaves any ambitions and intrigues to his wife. He prefers to spend his days combining his three passions: hawks, hounds, and horses.

Bidow Keep was constructed in 470 using stones from more ancient fortifications of the area, some even transported by ferry down the Shem from the Sorkin Mountains. Some of the stones bear strange symbols that have spurred many legends among the townsfolk. One stone depicts several lancers fighting an invisible foe, causing endless speculation about the enemy's identity.

The keep is urgently in need of repair. The cellars have a tendency to flood in spring and the foundations are showing signs of weakening. Erdar of Orinain¹, Kaldor's Inspector of Public Works, recently visited to determine what must be done. He advised that extensive repairs must be undertaken soon to avoid possible collapse of the keep. Erdar estimates the necessary repairs will take at least two years and cost £400.

The Bidow region has long had a reputation for mystery and mayhem. Most folk blame the stones used to build the keep. Locals also speak of a demon that stalks the Forest of Leth to the southeast. Disappearances in this forest exceed a dozen over the past decade. Recently two miners disappeared while investigating an abandoned tin mine near the headwaters of the Dobra River. Peasants in outlying manors may bear a quarterstaff and a short dagger when collecting dropwood or tending swine.

1. Erdar of Orinain is related to Hazmaral of Orinain, the outcast Khuzdul mason who upgraded Burzyn's fortifications 200 years ago.

ESENR [K5] 1*Marindas Hundred, Balimshire, 400

Esenor is held by Baron Kisan Tesla, age 48, from Earl Curo of Gardiren. The keep was built in 285 and rebuilt in 525. Esenor is a small but wealthy barony, with rich soils and lush meadowlands. The baron's kennels produce some of Kaldor's finest hunting hounds. Sir Kisan counts himself one of Rekela Tyrnal Dariune's closest friends and confidants.

Sir Kisan is a shrewd negotiator and brilliant intriguer. Esenor's central location in Kaldor enables the baron to travel easily to the halls of power. He has many friends and contacts at court, in the Laranian Church, and in the powerful clothiers' and mercantylers' guilds. He is friendly with Lady Erila Kaphin, who sometimes visits him at his lodge at Padel. Of course, many powerful men distrust his political abilities.

Sir Kisan is married to Lady Orella, oldest daughter of Earl Curo, but they separated in 718 after 16 years of stormy marriage. Lady Orella is now the bailiff of wealthy Tisbury Manor, where she lives with their two daughters who both dread the prospect of being selected for marriage. It is widely known that both girls also loathe their father. Some jest (quietly) that Sir Kisan can "charm an adder, but cannot kiss a wife for fear of poison."

FISEN [K5] Anvusen Hundred, Balimshire, 190

Fisen was built in 164 by Medrik of Serelind and later used as a mustering point by his forces before the Battle of Noneth. For centuries, the keep remained the principal seat for kings of Kaldor, but soon after the Restoration, it became the moot of Balimshire. This continued until Haldan II built Querina and reorganized the shires in 624.

Fisen Keep has always been the primary gateway to the Rethel Fen and its mysterious inhabitants. Locals refer to the fenlanders as “the undins,” something of a play on the words “undine” and “undead.” The busy river port handles all manner of strange fenlander boats bearing furs, herbs, dyes, and potions trapped or gathered in the extensive marshlands south of Fisen. Locals entering the fens to gather their own herbs have a habit of disappearing in the deep bogs.

The keep is the home of Medrik’s Banner and Medrik’s Spear, purported relics of the great king himself. The banner is little more than a worn and faded square of dirty brown cloth with a few patches of colored thread. The banner and spear hang in a place of honor in the great hall. The spear hangs point down, an unusual orientation; touching the spearhead is said to bring luck in battle.

A local legend relates how Aidrik II commanded a knight to bring him Medrik’s Spear before the Battle of Kiban in 377. The spear dropped suddenly as it was being removed from the wall and pierced the knight through the eye. It was an ill omen and Aidrik lost the battle after the Earl of Pagostra (Kiban) defected to Fierth the Usurper. The victorious Fierth personally replaced the spear on the wall where it remains to this day.

Constable Dagald Jendral, a landless knight who married into Clan Dariune, holds the keep for the Earl of Balim. Sir Dagald has outlived his two sons, who both died in a Kath ambush while serving in the Army of the Chelmarch.

Sir Dagald is intelligent and an adequate constable, though neither dynamic nor martial. He is a master of the courtly arts and intolerant of bad manners. He is often consulted on customs of chivalry.

GARDIREN [K4] 2

Tonallan Hundred, Nephshire, 640

Gardiren was the capital of Serelind in the days before the founding of Kaldor by Medrik I. The current structure was started in 130 as a keep and upgraded to a castle by Medrik in 170. It was burned and suffered extensive damage during the Kaldoric Civil War and rebuilt in 403 to its present dimensions.

Gardiren is held by the leonine Earl Hemisen

Curo, the "Lion of the North," who claims descent from the first kings of Serelind and the House of Tane. He donates heavily to the Enclave of the Holy Oak to finance their research and his own passion for genealogy. The earl is married to Meliara Kynn, sister of the Serekela of Kaldor. They have been blessed with eleven healthy children, including twin 19-year-old sons.

The Earl of Neph, 50, is an epicure renowned for the quality of his table. He amazes guests with dishes seasoned with spices from the breadth of Lythia. The earl's business relationships with importers provide him with valuable intelligence and he is well informed about matters beyond Kaldor's borders. Earl Curo's skill at court intrigue is supported by his carefully chosen vassals and an excellent network of informants.

Gardiren's recent history makes it differ in ways immediately obvious to travelers. A terrible fire in 684 devastated much of the castletown. After a second fire in 702, the earl instituted a number of measures to rebuild the town and prevent another fire. Today, many structures in the castletown are of stone and all have roofs of local slate. There is an especially high number of Jarin residents, many of whom immigrated in 703 when Lorkin fell and the earl was actively seeking craftsmen. The Ilviran church is well favored here and enjoys tax-exempt status.

GETHA [K5] 1

Fethael Hundred, Nephshire, 260

Getha Keep is held from the king by Baron Chimin Indama, who also serves as Sheriff of Neph. The keep was first constructed in 280, then razed by fire in 437. It was completely rebuilt in 440 and is protected by a strong curtain wall.

Although Getha is nearly five centuries old, it is still a rugged frontier town. Surrounding manors are frequently victimized by wolves in winter and bears in summer. The guilds of timberwrights and charcoalers are well organized and prosperous.

Established to secure the Silver Way, Getha's prosperity has diminished since some trade goods are now barged to Kiban from the Naniom Bridge. Baron Indama, in his capacity as Sheriff of Neph, has responded by establishing a seasonal outpost and demanding a toll at the bridge. He seeks the king's permission to fortify it. The baron has many allies who support this petition and has earned the enmity of Earl Dariune of Kiban.

One ally is Hemisen Curo, the Earl of Neph at Gardiren, whose sister, Lady Myrtis Curo, married Baron Indama in 697. The eldest child of that union, Sir Harapa Indama, married Udine Elendsa in 718; the baron's two infant grandchildren, Dosyl and Halene, have a distant claim to the throne. Getha was a vassal barony of Earls of Neph until 592, when King Iemald sought to curb the regional power of Earl Kalassen by raising the barony to royal tenancy.

Getha hosts a grain fair early in the autumn as mercantylers from central Kaldor, Nephshire, and Meselyneshire converge in preparation for the arduous journey up the Silver Way. Hundreds of bushel sacks of wheat, oats, and barley are assembled into caravans, while mercenaries and teamsters fight, gamble, and drink the potent local mead.

A staunchly loyal supporter of King Miginath, Sir Chimin Indama is not noted for his mental agility but is dependable and honest. He was a champion joustier in his youth but is now satisfied to watch his sons and nephews uphold the family's honor while he hunts and recounts past glories.

HERU [J5]

Wosendel Hundred, Semethshire, 415

Heru is held by Constable Bereden Pawade for Earl Meleken of Qualdris. The keep was built in 548 and controls the only crossing of the Shem south of Gardiren. The constable is a skilled administrator and has dramatically increased the revenue of this estate since his appointment in 709.

The settlement thrives on traffic between Olokand and Tashal. Bridge tolls and mercantile taxes are a valuable source of silver for the earl. The constable has set aside land near the toll bridge for caravans and there are several good inns in the settlement. He has organized two fairs timed to match the arrival of the Fur Road caravan, both southbound and northbound.

Sir Bereden has also encouraged trade with a reclusive band of outcast Kath who maintain an encampment in the nearby Tivenara marshlands. These tribesmen provide rare herbs to local mercantylers in exchange for metal goods.

Sir Bereden is a loyal knight. Having been promised a manor by Earl Meleken, Sir Bereden plans an expedition to locate his missing liege (see QUALDRIS, page 42). He awaits permission from Lady Thilisa of Qualdris to undertake this quest and to leave Heru in the charge of the Bailiff of Antiven.

HUTOP [K6] 1

Daynora Hundred, Oselshire, 340

Hutop Keep was built in 430 by Aidrik IV as a stronghold against the Pagaelin. It is the seat of the Sheriff of Osel but the office has been vacant since the death of Sir Merik Elendsa, brother of the king, in 719. The king has yet to determine a successor.

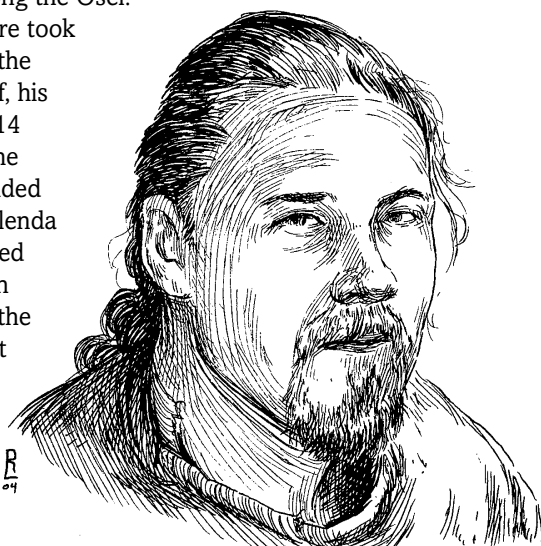

The Earl of Neph, who has no holdings in the south, has let it be known he would undertake responsibility for this office. The Earl of Balim, who holds nearby Jedes, and the Earl of Osel, whose seat is at Qualdris, are unlikely to support this appointment. Hutop is especially valuable because it controls one of the kingdom's few silver mines in the hills to the north.

Sir Kodar Maradyne, Bailiff of Daynora Hundred, is deputy sheriff but is not really up to the task. His laxness has made Hutop a haven for roustabouts, ne'er-do-wells, and a rough crowd of miners and mercenaries.

The Mercantylers' Guild holds a trading post at Oselbridge from the crown. The current franchisee is Grunda of Tyune, who trades metal tools and weapons with the Pagaelin. He is aided by two journeymen, one apprentice, and a garrison of five mercenaries. Deputy Sheriff Kodar has granted Grunda permission to construct a wooden palisade, which is partially complete. The Baron of Kobing, who has ambitions to build a keep at Oselbridge, is furious with Grunda the "traitor" and the "interloping" deputy sheriff.

Nearby Alenda Manor was destroyed by the Pagaelin in 712. It had been the first of a series of planned outposts along the Osel.

The massacre took the lives of the knight-bailiff, his family, and 14 peasants. The sheriff intended to rebuild Alenda before he died and this plan now awaits the appointment of a new sheriff.

Sir Kodar Maradyne (Bailiff)

JEDES [J6] 1

Asolade Hundred, Oselshire, 245

Jedes Keep was built in 350 and used as a base by Fierth the Usurper during the Kaldoric Civil War. The keep was severely damaged during the power struggle that followed the death of King Iemald. Haldan the Elder granted Jedes to Clan Dariune in 603. It took 20 years for Clan Dariune to rebuild the keep to its current form. A wharf now facilitates communication with Tashal, 14 leagues upriver.

Constable Shernath Mirdarne holds Jedes for Earl Dariune of Kiban. Sir Shernath is a childhood friend of Earl Dariune and one of his most trusted advisors. He is a strong leader who has benefited from extra toll revenues since lead and copper mines opened to the south. These mines are on the edge of Pagaelin territory and the Miners' Guild has a contract with the constable to provide guards. Sir Shernath has also improved the roads to Kolorn and Hutop.

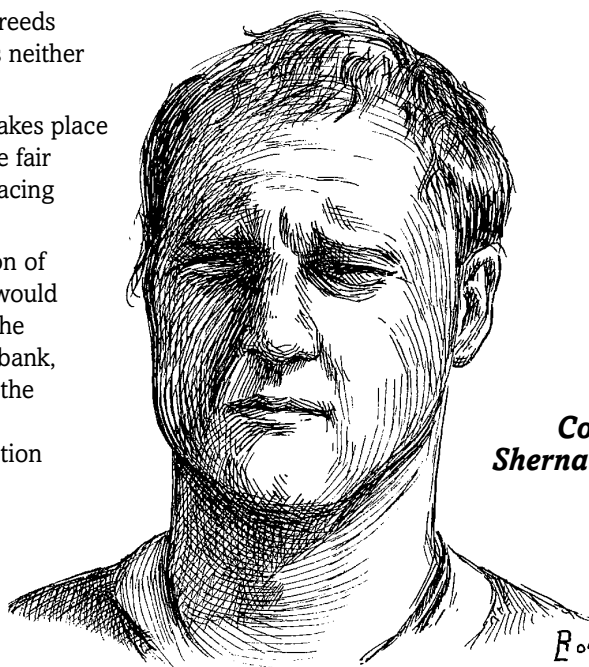

King Miginath is fond of Jedes and the mineral springs at nearby Bromeleon; he spends more time here, at the earl's expense, than at any other fief except Olokand. Secret meetings took place at Jedes to negotiate Miginath's return from exile in Chybisa.

Jedes is a renowned center of horse breeding. Ostler Iriel of Haskew from Jedes is the Guildmaster of Eastern Hârn. An unusually high percentage of Jedes steeds are grays or whites. The rumor that they are crossbreeds between Reksyni and Shava horses (unicorns) is neither confirmed nor denied by local breeders.

The Jedes Fair, Kaldor's largest horse fair, takes place annually from the 25th to the 30th of Kelen. The fair includes a tournament and a number of horse racing events. The king and his court always attend.

Earl Dariune is interested in the construction of a bridge over the Kald at Jedes. He knows this would divert some Salt Route profit to his coffers but the estimates of cost, including a keep on the west bank, exceed £2,000. In his capacity as Chancellor of the Exchequer, the earl intrigues to have the bridge funded by the Royal Treasury. No definitive petition has been drafted for the king's consideration.

KIBAN [K5] 2

Miona Hundred, Balimshire, 2730

Kiban is the seat of Sir Troda Dariune, Earl of Balim. It was founded around 165 as a frontier post of Serelind, then given to the Earl of Pagostra in 188 after Kaldor was founded. It was made a keep around 300 and was the site of the final battle of the Kaldoric Civil War in 377, when it was granted to Clan Dariune. The castle was built between 605 and 653. In 703, construction began on a town wall, which is unfinished.

Sir Troda, 46, is a vigorous, good-humored, intelligent man. His mother was Princess Kethele Elendsa, which gives him a claim to the throne. Negotiations are underway to betroth his eldest son, Scina, with Princess Cheselyne Elendsa. She has a strong claim to the throne, as would any children of the marriage.

From the 9th to the 12th of Peonu, the town comes alive with the annual Feast of Yselde. Doorways and windows are festooned with woven wreaths of spring flowers and bundles of wheat. It is great fun for the peasants, with much dancing and matchmaking.

The festival includes mock combat and jousting by men mounted on the backs of other men and armed with sheaves of wheat. The storytelling contest draws some of the best storytellers in the kingdom. On the night of the 11th, the earl hosts a grand feast and a bonfire for all his serfs within walking distance.

Another highlight is the longbow contest sponsored by the earl. Participation is by invitation only and is limited to yeomen. The earl awards the grand prize of 120d and an Emelrene longbow.

KOBING [K6] 1

Firithel Hundred, Oselshire, 345

Kobing keep was built by Aidrik IV in 428, replacing an ancient stone tower of Khuzan origin. Clan Firth acquired the keep and barony in 441. The Firths held land in the area before Lothrim's time and claim the oldest noble bloodline in Kaldor. They like to call themselves Barons of Kobe.

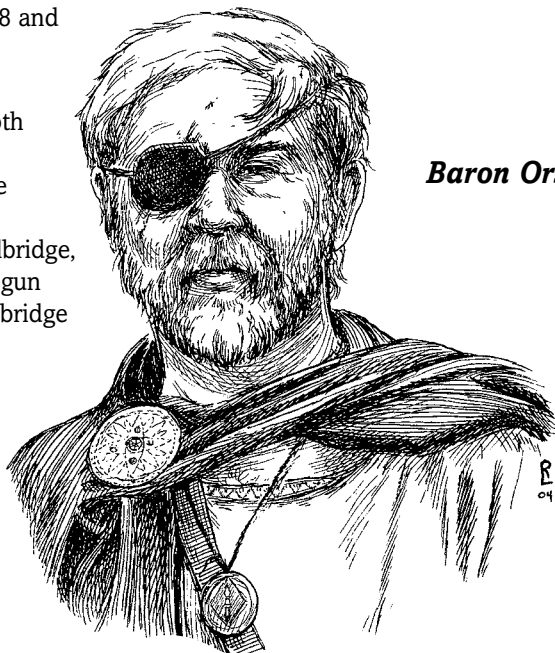

The Kobing region is known for its numerous barrows, although most are hard to distinguish from natural hills. The Melderyni mage Genin arrived at Kobing around 579 to study the barrows. Genin remained in Kobing for some years and also launched several expeditions in search of Khuzan and Sindarin ruins.

Baron Orsin Firth acquired his title in 715. His father, Sir Jerin Firth, married Princess Lenera Elendsa in 672. The energetic and ambitious Orsin has a claim to the throne.

Sir Orsin is Lord Marshal of Oselmarch and commands some of Kaldor's best-trained soldiers to secure the southern frontier against the Pagaelin. The baron is an accomplished warrior and a brilliant leader. He lost an eye fighting the Pagaelin in 718 and enjoys the loyalty of his men.

Baron Orsin has twice petitioned the king to establish a keep at Oselbridge. Both petitions have been denied. The baron suspects the Mangai is responsible for the king's reaction. The Mercantylers' Guild, which has a seasonal trading post at Oselbridge, has its own ambitions and has already begun construction of a fortified manor like Trobridge Inn (see HUTOP, page 31).

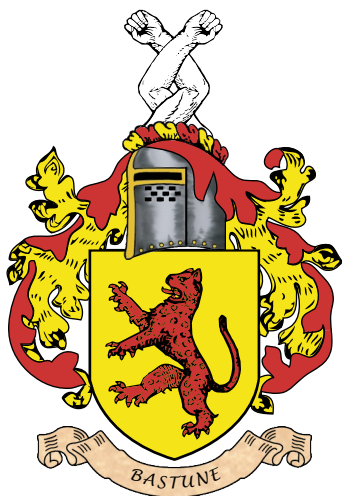

The baron has increased aggressive patrols seeking to provoke the Pagaelin. A larger conflict would increase the likelihood of him receiving a crenellation license for Oselbridge. Acquiring the dormant title of "Earl of Chybisa" is another of his lofty goals.

KOLORN [J5] 1

Habimas Hundred, Thelshire, 360

Kolorn is held by Baron Greon Bastune from Earl Caldeth of Minarsas. The keep was originally built in 160 on the ruins of an earlier Jarin fortress and rebuilt in 530. The baron is a wenching degenerate. Fortunately, his young son, Sir Lyndar, 24, is a conscientious administrator.

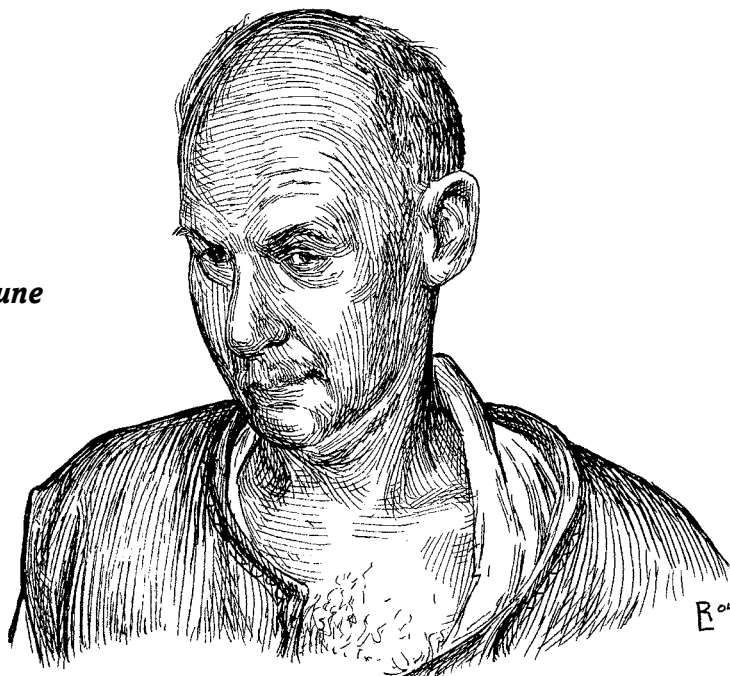

The baron is unaware that his wife, the beautiful Lady

Peresta Brailour Bastune, once maintained an adulterous relationship with Sir Koris Harabor, a bastard son of the king and currently Marshal of the Royal Guard. Some suspect that Sir Lyndar is the product of that union, not the son of the baron. Lady Peresta still spends most of her time at the Bastune townhouse in Tashal and her ongoing infidelities are legendary.

The baron is deep in debt to the usurer Clan Rakin of Azadmere. He can no longer afford payments on the principal, but pays the interest with an annual shipment of grain and horses. Neither the baron's son nor his liege are aware of his debts.

KYG [K5] 1

Tishilan Hundred, Vemionshire, 340

Kyg Keep is held by constable Sir Danyes Bernan for Earl Dariune of Kiban. The site was a Jarin hill fort that was built on an abandoned Khuzdul trading post in the first century TR, from which the site took its name. The fortification atop the ancient kyg has been upgraded several times since and is currently under repair. The west wall is covered by scaffolding.

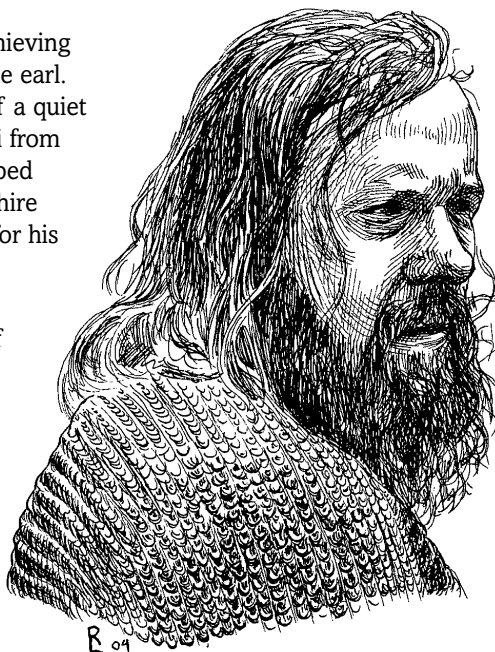

Kyg is the best known and best preserved example of the few ancient Khuzdul trading forts that once dotted Kaldor. Some of these locations, such as Minarsas and Kobing, continue as trade centers to this day. Kygs were typically built atop rocky outcroppings and always had underground tunnels and chambers for storage and living quarters. Most are lost in the wilds of Vemionshire, Oselshire, and Nephshire, obscured beneath centuries of overgrowth.

Sir Danyes is well connected and maintains a lavish home in Tashal. He is known as a consummate host and his events are always well attended, continuing long after the more sedate guests have retired. Afterward, rumors of scandalous behavior and embarrassed apologies circulate widely among the younger nobility. Sir Danyes has never married and has no known children, legitimate or otherwise.

Sir Danyes, a knight in his early forties, was appointed constable in 717. He is a corrupt and thieving administrator, although this is not yet known to the earl. Under his direction, Kyg has become the center of a quiet Lia-Kavair operation that acquires herbs and fungi from local herbalists and produces poisons and proscribed drugs for distribution in the rich markets of Thelshire and Semethshire. Sir Danyes is paid handsomely for his protection and patronage.

In the summer of 718, Amersyn Ethasiel, the youngest sister of the Baron of Setrew and one of Sir Danyes' more regular guests, started talking about her sudden conversion to Peonianism. On her last visit to Sir Danyes' Tashal residence, she perished in a tragic accident when a heavy piece of slate fell from a rooftop and struck her head.

MINARSAS [K5] 1

Atressa Hundred, Vemionshire, 650

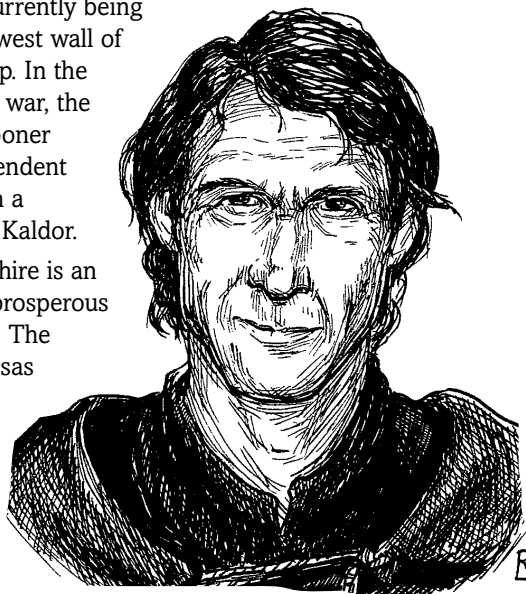

Minarsas Castle dominates the Vemion River valley in eastern Kaldor. The original keep was built by the Kingdom of Arwn atop an ancient Khuzan and Jarin trading post. It was then rebuilt in 168 as a royal castle by King Orsin of Pagostra.

The castle is the seat of Earl Declaen Caldeth, a clever and powerful figure in Kaldor. He is married to the invalid Lady Ialny Valador and has three children. His oldest daughter, Lady Thilisa, is married to Earl Sedris Meleken of Qualdris. His son, Sir Urian, is a fine, tall figure of a knight, known more for his fighting prowess than his wisdom. Camissa, the youngest, is recently of marriageable age and her father is cautious about suitors.

Caldeth is an ancient Jarin clan, synonymous with Vemionshire for many generations. Since the clan has no claim to the throne itself, the earl is an attractive ally to claimants. The cautious Sir Declaen is aware that King Miginath's best plans may go awry. He maintains an extra company of mercenaries and has large reserves of silver. His strongholds are maintained in top condition; repairs are currently being made to the west wall of Minarsas keep. In the event of civil war, the earl would sooner see an independent Pagostra than a weakly ruled Kaldor.

Vemionshire is an isolated but prosperous sheep region. The annual Minarsas Wool Fair is one of the largest commercial events in Kaldor.

NENDA [K5] ①

Grimruld Hundred, Vemionshire, 350

Nenda is the main river port of Vemionshire. Much of the lucrative wool and salt trade passes through the town on the way to the markets of central Kaldor. It is also a busy trading post for trappers and woodsmen bound for the Sorkin Mountains.

Nenda is held by Sir Erelar Hirnen, Baron of Nenda, from the king. The baron is extremely ill-tempered, a trait that has caused a rift with the local Mangai. No one stays in his presence longer than necessary. Sir Erelar is the king's nephew and has a claim to the throne. His brother, Sir Tarkin, is the Lord Chancellor of Kaldor.

The keep, originally called Habta Tower, was built in 320 and rebuilt in 407 after the Kaldoric Civil War. The town retains its Jarin heritage, which shows itself in small but significant ways. Many of the old ways are still followed and visitors can hear songs and stories of ancient heroes. Nenda's Order of the Lame Adder worships an obscure serpent demi-god of Ilvir.

The Selene River is fordable at Nenda, for which the baron charges a toll. Guards at the ford recently arrested a howling lunatic for disturbing the peace. They bound the stranger and brought him to Sir Erelar but the man has done nothing since but scream nonsense rhymes such as "the dead are in my head" or "the sword is with my lord." He has also repeatedly proclaimed:

*"Aboroth comes in thunder,
Hounds and doom beside,
Three crowns lie under,
His the hand that will decide."*

Those learned in the ancient history of Vemionshire might remember that the area north and east of Nenda was made up of three kingdoms, Merila, Tyannild, and Tanor, and that hounds are prominent in Jarin lore.

Baron Erelar Hirnen and his wife

NUBETH [K5] 1

Tarial Hundred, Thelshire, 355

Nubeth Keep, built in 420, is held by Clan Elorieth from Earl Meleken of Qualdris. It lies on the recently improved road that connects Vemionshire to Thelshire. Much of the surrounding area, while not rich farming land, is excellent pasture. Horses are raised for combat, cattle for work and hides, swine for meat, and, in the southern hills, sheep for wool and parchment.

Rye, barley, apples, and pears are the most common crops. The nearby Laranian abbey of Tarial produces excellent barley ales, potent ciders, and a fine strong, sweet perry. The lands around Nubeth are quiet and peaceful and most of the fiefs are well maintained and prosperous.

The current baron, Dwyn Elorieth, is 62 years old and in declining health. Rumors of his demise are frequent. His son and heir, Sir Arwyn, 34, is a fine man who married the daughter of a lesser branch of Clan Meleken; they have five children, all boys. Sir Dwyn's twin sons, Conwyn and Merwyn, are active on the tourney circuit. Since Sir Dwyn's wife, Releisa, died six years ago, he has lost interest in the intrigues of the royal court. The information he gets from his sons is often politically naive.

The annual Nubeth Fair features an important horse auction that is attended by many nobles and breeders. There is also a tourney popular with younger knights and local maidens who watch them. Sir Dwyn is a paternal figure and enjoys the commotion.

Nubeth is the site of a small chantry of arcane lore, founded by Sir Dwyn in memory of his sister, Mirim, a Peonian Pelnala and gifted healer. The chantry was once an Ilviran abbey, long abandoned and still under renovation. The lorists are quietly amassing a significant library of healing lore augmented by Kaldoran, Chybisian, and Laranian history. With the exception of Old Dulie, a Savoryan Viran from Cherafir, there are no known Shek-Pvar in the area.

OLOKAND [J5] 2

Ambarnis Hundred, Meselyneshire, 800

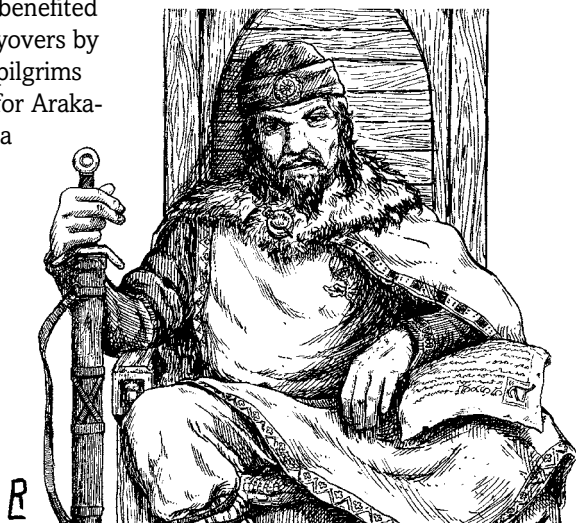

Olokand is the seat of Clan Elendsa, the royal family of Kaldor. It is strategically located on the western bank of the Kald River and guards the Elendsa Bridge and the Fur Road linking Kaldor to Orbaal.

The first stone fortification at Olokand dates from 128. It survives as Sanric Tower, named for the founder of the Kingdom of Nurelia. The castle, built between 379 and 384 by King Fierth, incorporated Sanric Tower into its large keep.

Olokand has a population of about 800 that swells to thousands in the late spring when the Fur Road caravans arrive from Orbaal, and again in summer for the Royal Chelebin Tournament of Chivalry. The king spends four months a year in Olokand, arriving in late Peonu and returning to Tashal by the end of summer.

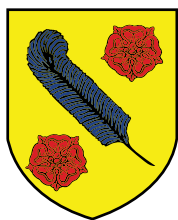

In the king's absence, Olokand is governed by the Sheriff of Meselyne, Sir Maldan Harabor, Miginath's eldest (but unacknowledged) bastard son. He has been sheriff and constable since 699. Sir Maldan is ruthless and ambitious; his desire for the throne is undoubted. Illegitimacy is a serious impediment to his ambitions but as long as the king lives, acknowledgement is possible. Meanwhile, his power and influence as Constable of Olokand and Sheriff of Meselyne is immense.

Following the Jarin Rebellion of 701–03, scores of refugee families fled south to Kaldor. The sheriff accepted those that came to Olokand as serfs, distributing the refugee families among favored manors. Ilviran rites and worship are common in the region and Olokand has always benefited from layovers by Ilviran pilgrims bound for Araka-Kalai via the Fur Road.

PENDETH [K5] Grimruld Hundred, Vemionshire, 370

Pendeth is a quaint settlement best known for its peculiar keep. While the area has been settled for hundreds of years, the stout octagonal keep is relatively new, having been finished in 504. It was built upon an old border fort that dates from the Jarin kingdom of Tanor. The settlement is a quiet stop for those traveling between Minarsas and Nenda. The land is relatively poor and hilly and much of it is given over to pasture for sheep.

The current constable, Sir Garath Ruseller, is a drunkard. In spite of being a cousin, the Earl of Neph intends to replace him. The constable's son, Sir Taran, is the de facto constable. He is a hotheaded youth and barely competent. The earl is also concerned about Sir Taran's failure to produce useful intelligence on the activities of the Earl of Vemion.

Sir Garath has recently learned that his son secretly harbors a knight from Kyg who abandoned his feudal duties for the affections of a lowborn maiden. The knight, Sir Eamyt Walorne, is the childhood friend of Sir Taran. They both know the penniless Sir Eamyt will be imprisoned if he returns to Kyg. Sir Garath fears reprisals from Constable Danyes and has pleaded with his son to evict Sir Eamyt.

A long-abandoned Khuzan mine was rediscovered in 718 just two leagues east of Pendeth. The Serolan of Lyntord, Sir Garath's friend and confessor, believes it to be the famous lost Khax mine. Once a rich silver mine, Khax was abandoned for reasons unknown. Sir Garath does not wish for the mine to be reopened lest he lose Faeserol Manor to the Miners' Guild.

QUALDRIS [K6]

Siloryne Hundred, Oselshire, 610

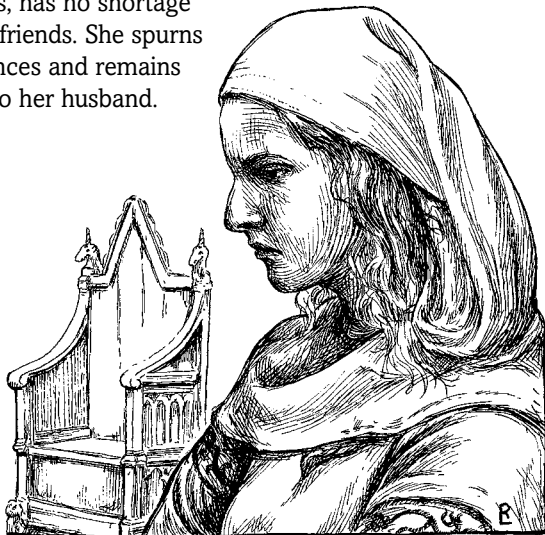

Qualdris Castle has been the seat of the Earl of Osel since the Restoration in 406. Originally built in 140 as a keep, the current castle dates from 378 when Fierth the Usurper made Qualdris his seat.

Qualdris is the heart of Oselshire, a pristine region of rolling hills excellent for raising cattle, horses, and sheep. A rich copper mine is nearby.

Qualdris has long been marked by madness and tragedy. The castle is home to the notorious Bloody Tapestry, which depicts the wife of the third earl, murdered by her deranged son. On the anniversary of her death, the tapestry has been seen to take on a faint reddish tinge.

Earl Sedris Meleken, 27, a man of renowned honor, is currently away from the castle in search of a murderer. He left early in 719 and his estates are managed by his brilliant and radiant wife, Thilisa, 23. They do not yet have any children; if Sir Sedris does not return, 12 generations of direct descent will come to an end.

More than one unwed knight sees the opportunities present. Lady Thilisa, the daughter of Earl Caldeth of Minarsas, has no shortage of male friends. She spurns all advances and remains faithful to her husband.

QUERINA [K5]

Bredan Hundred, Semethshire, 455

Querina was built in 640 by Haldan the Younger as a royal retreat close to the kingdom's largest city and as a way to check the power of the Earls of Balim. Held by Sir Conwan Elendsa, the Sheriff of Semeth, for his uncle the king, the keep is the administrative center of half of the densely populated heartland of Kaldor. Querina controls travel on the busy Tashal-Kiban road and generates significant income from tolls and fees.

Semethshire also includes much of the wild Kathela Hills region west of the Kald River. Sir Korus Ynel, the deputy warden of the Chelmarch and bailiff of Kathane Manor, reports to the sheriff as the king's agent in Semethshire. Sir Korus is always in need of personnel; the sheriff obliges by sending him miscreants and those punished for the slightest offenses.

Sir Conwan's father, Sir Brandis Elendsa, was Torastra's Master of the Hunt. Sir Brandis supported Cheselyne the Elder over his brother Miginath at the last succession council.

Sir Conwan is bound by an inconvenient oath made in his impulsive younger days. The Laranian Serekela, Kalabin Elendsa, initially blocked his marriage to Lady Hesena Inamis because she worshipped Save-K'nor. In 708, the Serekela agreed to allow the marriage only on Sir Conwan's solemn oath that he and any children born to this union forsake any claim to the throne. Soon after, the Serekela was found stabbed inside his locked chambers.

Some nobles feel that Sir Conwan remains the best man to succeed Miginath, but only Serekela Edine Kynn can relieve him of his oath. Secret and delicate negotiations with the Serekela have been ongoing for several years.

SETREW [J4]

Ambarnis Hundred, Meselyneshire, 520

Setrew Keep was built around 200 on the ruins of an early Jarin fortress. It partially collapsed in 327 due to faulty construction and was rebuilt in 410. The keep is still plagued by structural problems and is rumored to be haunted.

Baron Wevran Ethasiel holds Setrew from Earl Curo. Like his father, the baron is a man whose ambitions exceed his meager abilities. He has been involved in numerous intrigues and is not highly trusted. Any cleverly worded appeal to his vanity is likely to earn a hearing. His foolishness may one day lead him into treason.

Sir Wevran is a widower; his wife died in childbirth. He often holds lavish feasts with debauched and gruesome diversions. Sir Romlach Ethasiel, his only son, is one of Kaldor's most dangerous knights in the tourney lists and something of a bully at other times.

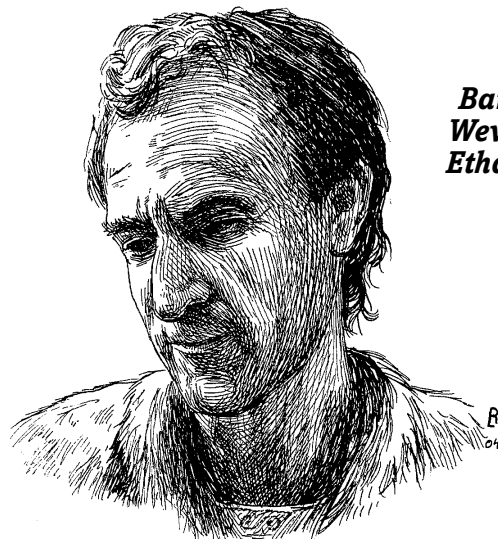

A local and deadly Lia-Kavair clan ships Khuzan weapons to Lorkin via the Fur Road and Anoth River. The violent and depraved Taarbri Geldestaar of Lorkin pays for them with amber and rare Anoth Delta herbs that reach wide distribution throughout Kaldor.

One of the most tightly controlled settlements in Kaldor, Setrew is home to a demoralized and repressed populace. Justice is arbitrary and harsh. The Sheriff of Meselyne is too occupied with other matters to pursue complaints from the domain of a possible future ally.

Sir Wevran has lost two sisters to tragedy. His younger sister Thuryle disappeared around 705. Thuryle, a Peonian Reslava, is thought to have been visiting Thay at the time the Ivinians attacked that city, although there is no certain evidence. Last summer, a party exploring the ruins of the Peonian temple in Thay reported seeing a ghostly figure similar in description to the baron's sister.

In the summer of 718, the baron's youngest sister, Amersyn, started talking about her sudden conversion to Peonianism. Amersyn was a regular guest at the notorious parties thrown at the Tashal townhouse of Sir Danyes Bernan, Constable of Kyg. On her last visit to Sir Danyes' residence, she perished in a tragic accident when a heavy piece of slate fell from a rooftop and struck her head.

SHEBRA [K5] 1

Miona Hundred, Balimshire, 320

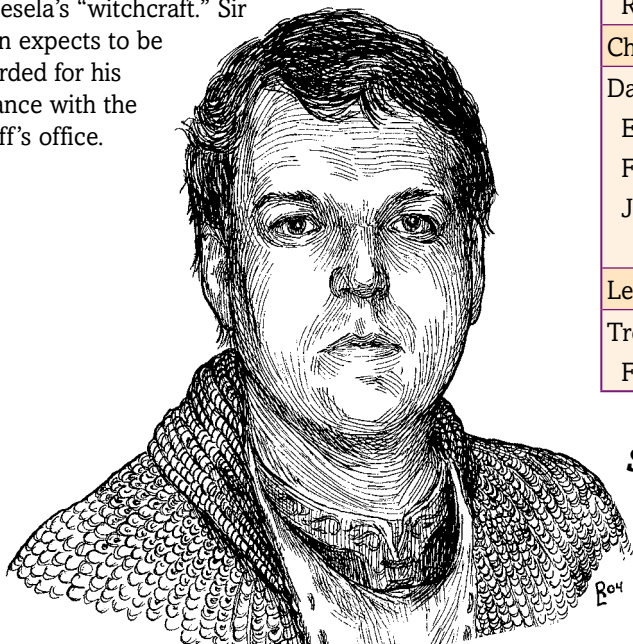

Shebra sits squarely in the middle of the kingdom and has been a center of weaving, dying, and fulling for many generations. The keep was built in 457 by Queen Myselbane. It is surrounded by good land along the Nephen River and much of the area is cultivated and fertile. The shire is relatively safe and prosperous.

The sheriff, Sir Eris Karondal, 38, has little trouble keeping the king's peace and collecting the king's taxes. Clan Karondal owes its position to Clan Dariune and holds four manors under Kiban. Historically, the sheriff has had to balance the crown's interests with those of the powerful Earls of Balim. He is fortunate that the interests of the crown and Clan Dariune are so closely aligned and works to prevent any changes to the current situation. Sir Eris maintains a large store of silver to secure his future.

Sir Eris, the son of the previous sheriff, was appointed to the office when his father died in 712. He is a dour and stolid man with little imagination but a competent administrator. He is devoted to his wife, Lady Mesela, and their newborn child.

Lady Mesela is a talented and excitable mystic, known to wander the woods, "speaking to trees and animals." Sir Asorn Jaraxer, lord of Gentro Manor, believes she has used her "black arts" to his detriment. He plans on informing Rekela Emerel at Brynd of Mesela's "witchcraft." Sir Asorn expects to be rewarded for his vigilance with the sheriff's office.

Sheriff Eris Karondal

SIRENDEL [K5]

Cedmyme Hundred, Thelshire, 310

Sirendel is the seat of the Sheriff of Thel, whose charge is mostly quiet woodland of moderate fertility and sparse population. Spotted patches of cropland are interspersed with grassy hills dotted with sheep and horses.

Thelshire holds a major crossroads and the locals are reasonably tolerant of strangers.

The keep was built from 355 to 430, with delays due to the unstable political situation of the time. Sheriff Ranal Gybsen, 28, is a headstrong knight. He is presently unmarried and one of the shire's most eligible bachelors. Several local lords have approached him to arrange a match with one of their daughters. To the great nobles he is regarded as clever but uninspiring. He often travels with the king's court and is a frequent visitor to Tashal.

The Taniran Hills to the south are rich in minerals, including copper, salt, tin, and silver. Control of the silver mine is disputed between sheriffs, as it lies on the border between Thelshire and Oselshire. Surveys of the disputed border always seem to favor the sponsoring sheriff.

North of Sirendel lies Parikyng. Legend states this ancient fastness was used to secret the treasures of the Jarin kingdom of Pari. According to the most popular tale, a fell reptilian beast, invulnerable to all of impure heart, defended the treasure. When Pari submitted to Lothrim, the treasure's location was lost. Treasure hunters have sought the ancient refuge for centuries.

TASHAL [J5] 4

Endrunel Hundred, Semethshire, 11,400

Tashal is the largest settlement in Kaldor and the second largest city on Hârn. It is not a freetown although an aldermanic council of 12 helps govern.

The city boasts a formidable citadel and contains several splendid public buildings and temples, but most folk live and work in three- and four-story tenements. There are plans to extend the city walls to include the villages of Lyrn to the southeast and Artoen to the northeast but work has not been started on this expansion.

Beneath the city lies a labyrinth of ancient tunnels, many of which date back to the time of Lothrim when Tashal was known as Kelapyn-Anuz. The tunnels can be accessed via the cellars of establishments controlled by the Lia-Kavair and the Church of Naveh. Few others know of these tunnels; fewer still explore them.

Tashal has grown wealthy from its location at the junction of four trade routes. Late every spring, goods arrive from Orbaal down the Fur Road, from Azadmere along the Silver Way, from Thay and the Lythian continent via the Genin Trail, and from western Hârn by the Salt Route. Most caravans stay the summer, camping on a nearby common, and depart in early fall.

During the summer, mercantylers from throughout Kaldor trade with locals and with each other at the Great Summer Fair. This event runs for the entire month of Larane and is second only to the festival celebrating the arrival of the Larun in Cherafir.

The king spends every winter in Tashal. He is a competent administrator and enjoys the hours he spends managing his city.

Sir Haldare Venera, Constable of Caer Elend, administers the city in the king's absence. The constable is fanatically loyal to King Miginath and works tirelessly to ensure the city retains its reputation for justice and prosperity. He communicates regularly with the Aldermanic Council, the Mangai, and the temples; his natural charisma ensures undisputed authority.

Originally a landless mercenary knight, Sir Haldare won his office by proving his courage and leadership during the Royal Chelebin Tourney in 714, where he was crowned Champion of the Melee.

Sir Haldare is a close friend and sparring partner of Marshal Koris Harabor. Some whisper this relationship implies support for the Harabors in any future struggle for the throne. Sir Haldare is ambitious and, like all bachelor knights, listens to any proposals that might include large grants of land. If asked, he states he will support whomever is chosen by Clan Elendsa's succession council.

The only stain on Sir Haldare's storied past is an ongoing feud with Sir Romlach Ethasiel, the heir to the Baron of Setrew's estates. The baron's son is one of the most dangerous knights in the kingdom but Sir Haldare has vowed to see justice done.

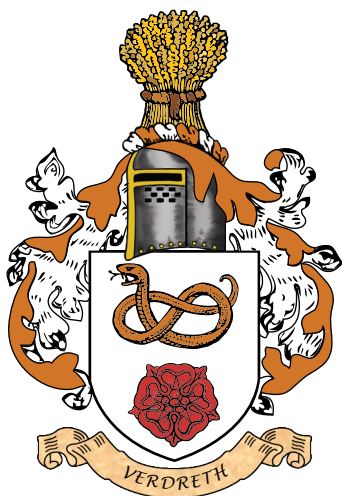

The city watch is made up of a mercenary company of light foot employed by Sir Haldare and a squadron of knights provided by the Sheriff of Semeth. Two to four companies of the Low Guard at Caer Elend can be called upon in an emergency. The Sheriff of Semeth and the Marshal of the Royal Guard are cousins but do not enjoy a high level of mutual trust.

Constable Haldare Venera

TERNUA [K5] 1

Tuselion Hundred, Semethshire, 395

Ternua Keep guards an old stone bridge that crosses the Nephren River. The keep was built in 165 by King Torbet of Kephria but has undergone several major renovations, the most recent being in 612.

The present baron, Sir Tarmas Verdreth, a corpulent man of 44, is notorious for his crude and boorish manners. He is a capable noble and few in the kingdom regard him as the fool he pretends to be. Clan Verdreth is of old Jarin stock and has long been known for producing respected churchmen and scholars. Sir Tarmas' sister Derwen is a Pvaric philosopher and Lyahvi Shenava. She is the Royal Master of Esoterica.

The baron has a strained relationship with his liege the king. Sir Tarmas longs to restore Clan Verdreth to the more exalted position it enjoyed under the House of Artane. The baron has grown wealthy from his tolls and investments and is quietly hiring mercenaries to supplement his forces.

Sir Tarmas is devoted to his mother, a social outcast stricken with leprosy two years ago. She resides at Erone Abbey, which the baron funds generously.

Ternua prospers from the fertile soil of the surrounding area and the innkeepers, teamsters, and others who profit from the flow of trade. The town is an important center for weaving and dying, importing most of its wool from the south.

TONOT [J4] 1

Navintas Hundred, Meselyneshire 315

Tonot is the most northerly keep in Kaldor, a rugged, disorderly settlement at the southern terminus of Noron's Way. The locals are hardy and self-sufficient folk accustomed to life at the edge of civilization.

The keep was built in 200 by King Brant of Nurelia to secure his kingdom's eastern borders and stem Taelda incursions.

Sir Kaltric Arno was granted the keep when Kalabin of Kaldor annexed Nurelia. His descendants held Tonot until the Restoration, when they lost their lands for supporting the House of Orgael. King Aidrik III granted the barony to Clan Dariune, which held it for nearly 200 years. Tonot was promised to Clan Pierstel in exchange for their support during the Baronial Revolt of 599. Clan Pierstel has provided a long line of loyal vassals and the young men of Clan Dariune are usually fostered here to acquire the toughness of the northern frontier.

Baron Uthris Pierstel is a renowned warrior who enjoys hunting and fighting. He is an uncouth and obstinate man of little patience, plagued by a sharp-tongued, resentful wife. The baron's long absences from his wife and her unwillingness to actively govern have led some to charge that he neglects his estates. The baron's sister is wed to Sir Troda Dariune, the Earl of Balim.

Sir Uthris is not fond of his urbane liege, preferring Earl Dariune's dynamic son and heir. Sir Uthris foresees a grim life for his nephew if Scina weds Princess Cheselyne the Younger. He never misses an opportunity to warn the young man.

The baron maintains a garrison of two companies; one light and one medium foot. Men of the sword find a warm welcome and an active life here. The Reblena of Yaltako, a Lady of Paladins chapter house, is a close friend. See ABRIEL, page 54.

Baron Uthris Pierstel

ULDIEN [K5] Chyle Hundred, Balimshire 285

Uldien is a quiet, scenic frontier town at the confluence of the Nephen and Selene rivers. It is an important center of fur trading and trappers journey up the Selene and Nephen rivers in search of fox, beaver, mink, ermine, and otter pelts.

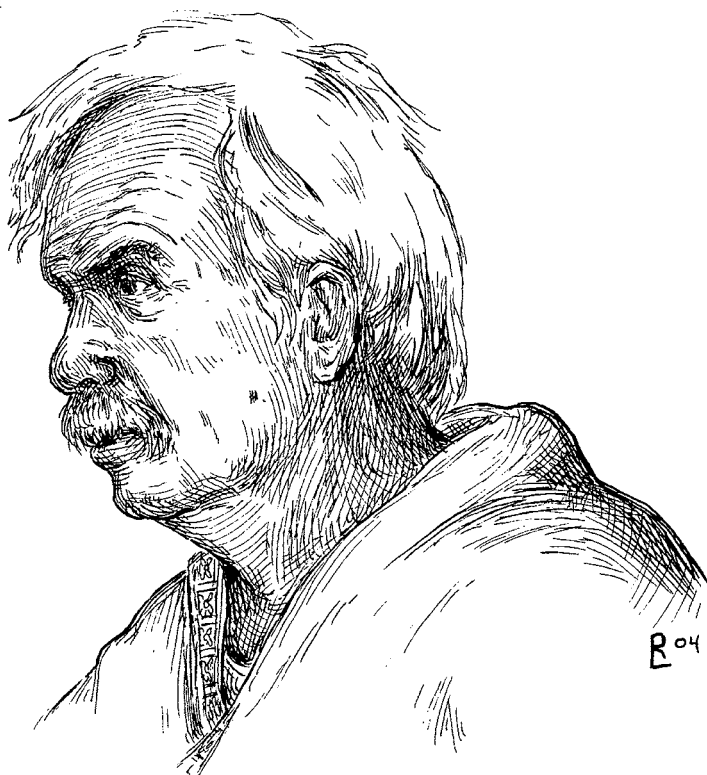

The present keep is of relatively recent origin, built in 569 atop a Jarin hillfort, which itself replaced a Khuzan kyg.

Baron Karsin Ubael is married to Lady Serli Firth, niece of the king and sister to the Baron of Kobing. Her twin sister, Lenera, is the Suloran (Mistress of Archives) at Caleme Abbey and her younger brother, Asorn, is the Lord Advocate of Kaldor. Although not one of Kaldor's wealthiest noble families, the baron's two surviving children have distant claims to the throne. A devoted family man, Sir Karsin is a model of chivalry and is much loved by the king.

Sir Karsin's father died mysteriously 11 years ago after leaving early one morning with two companions armed for battle; the reason for their journey was not given. They crossed the river in a small boat and disappeared into the fens to the southeast. His body was found a month later stripped of armour and clothing. The companions were never found.

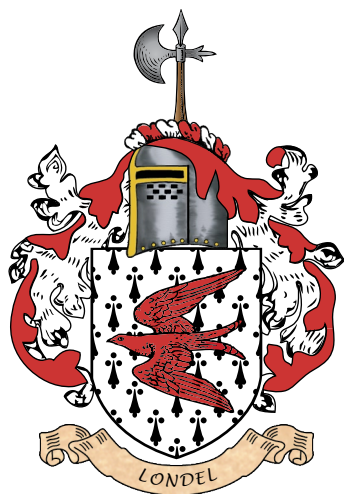

Sir Karsin's younger brother Belsin is a well-known explorer. He has been to most major ports around the Venarian Sea and to Hepekeria and beyond. Despite a shipwreck that ended his 717 expedition to Arlanto, he is ready to set forth again, this time from Thay to seek the fabled gold mines of Anzeloria.

YEGED [J4] 1

Revabyne Hundred, Meselyneshire 360

Located on the bank of the Shem River opposite from Gardiren, Yeged is a picturesque settlement with fabulous views of the Sorkin Mountains towering above the brooding conifers of the Yalten Hania Forest.

Yeged was first fortified soon after the fall of Lothrim's empire in 120. For 10 years, the warlords of Clan Kwen ruled the surrounding countryside as a petty domain. Wary of the growing power of Gardiren, Ronas Kwen swore fealty to Sanric I of Nurelia. In 140, Sanric II permitted the construction of a stone keep¹. Yeged surrendered bloodlessly to King Fierth's army after the fall of Gardiren. Clan Londel was granted the barony in 674 for its service at the Battle of the Ramala Gap.

Baron Churus Londel is widely regarded as a foolish romantic. He welcomes musicians and artists to his court and entertains guests with his own compositions. He is a skilled musician but some regard his lyrics as wanting. He is currently composing a ballad about two young lovers during the Jarin Rebellion of 701 and is seeking cheerful traveling companions to accompany him on a journey north. He also longs to visit Erael.

Sir Churus' wife, Lady Urila, is a cousin of the Baron of Tonot. Her political acumen is remarkable and she has loyally supported Earl Curo for years. They have three young children and she is adamantly opposed to her husband's "foolish adventure."

Yeged is home to a wealthy Ilviran temple run by the Order of the Yellow Hand. Students come from afar to learn illumination and calligraphy. The clerics also illustrate and copy manuscripts for a fee and have amassed a great library.

1. Yeged keep is sinking. The Jarin motte has been unable to support the increased weight of the stone keep and it has settled badly over the centuries. Several parts of the cellar have collapsed and flooded.

ZOBEN [K5] 1

Atressa Hundred, Vemionshire 295

Zoben Keep is held by a constable for Earl Caldeth of Minarsas. The keep was built in 70 by the early Jarin kingdom of Arwn and was extensively repaired in 620.

The hills around Zoban are filled with goats and sheep. The rocky, sandy soils favor oats, barley, and flax. Zoban linen is held in high esteem throughout the kingdom.

The constable, Sir Coreth Lothlar, is a newly appointed (717) and skillful administrator of common birth and uncommon valor. The son of a yeoman from Minarsas, Sir Coreth served the king in the army of the Chelmarch for some years, where he was seriously injured fighting a valiant rearguard against the Kath. He was later posted to the Oselmarch, then and now considered a more dangerous duty. He was captured by the Pagaelin and suffered terribly before his captors were attacked by a squad of the Order of the Lady of Paladins. The attack went badly until Coreth caused the spread of a fire that enabled the escape of the Laranian knights. Sir Vespar Hadan, commander of the unit and son of the Rekela of Nurez, dragged the crippled Coreth to safety. Sir Vespar's tale impressed the Earl of Vemion, who promptly knighted Coreth. After several years of loyal service, the earl appointed him Constable of Zoban. Sir Coreth has filled the role admirably.

The shade of a murdered Jarin lord walks Zoban's great hall. The ghost is that of Owain the Martyr, ruler of the petty kingdom of Darlen during the time of Lothrim. Owain was lured to Zoban by the lords of Arwn with the promise of an alliance against Lothrim. Instead, he was betrayed and beheaded, his body buried within the walls of Zoban. Masons discovered a headless skeleton inside a wall in the great hall when the keep was repaired 100 years ago. The remains were given proper burial but the ghost still haunts Zoban.

CALEME [J5]

Endrunel Hundred, Semethshire, 325

Caleme is the seat of the Serekela of Kaldor and is held by the Order of the Spear of Shattered Sorrow from the king. Founded in 240, Caleme houses an impressive temple, the Serekela's palace, a cloister for resident clergy, an academy for noble children, and a chapter house of the Order of the Lady of Paladins.

Serekela Edine Kynn has led the Kaldoric church since the murder of his corrupt predecessor, Kalabin Elendsa in 708. Before that, he had served as Rekela of Nurez since 701. Wealthy, energetic, and heavily involved in affairs of state, Serekela Kynn has risen far above his humble roots as second son of the Bailiff of Trilgen (Fisen). His success has been aided by a close friendship with the Earl of Balim.

In addition to his religious duties, Serekela Kynn administers the widespread church estates throughout Kaldor, assisted by four Rekels at Abriel, Brynd, Cholas, and Ledyne. All are members of the clerical Order of the Spear of Shattered Sorrow. Since taking office, Serekela Kynn has appointed Rekela Dariune, Rekela Bantire, and Rekela Indama. After Indama's unexpected death in 714, the Serekela replaced him with Rekela Hadan, an academic who has proven far less biddable than expected. He hopes to do better when the aged Rekela of Serelind dies.

The Order of the Lady of Paladins holds extensive lands; most are held by a Reblena. The majority of these holdings are devoted to generating revenue to support the five largest chapters. Each large chapter house maintains at least 10 knights and 20 medium foot.

The most senior Reblena, Sir Houla Artona, holds nearby Whyce chapter house. He is a competent and effective military commander charged with defending the Fur Road. The Sheriff of Meselyne has made it clear that he requires no assistance from Whyce, which places a distinct chill on their relationship.

The Serekela plans to call for a great survey of all church holdings in Kaldor. A complete inventory of the land, livestock, and other assets of every church fief in the kingdom would allow the Serekela to better assess the tithe due from each holding. Additionally, it would allow him to determine what resources the church could muster during a succession crisis. The Rekels and landowning knights are averse to this audit of their fiefs. The Serekela seeks trusted men to carry out the survey safely and accurately.

ABRIEL [J5]

Nelafayn Hundred, Meselyneshire, 170

Abriel Abbey dates from 170 when King Sanric II of Nurelia granted the lands to the Church. The Taela sacked the abbey in 235. When Kalabin took the throne, the Serekela of Nurelia became the Rekela of Nurez.

Ilor Hadan has been Rekela since 714.

He is a capable and pious man who cares little for temporal affairs. The Rekela spent 10 years serving in the Ethelanca at the pontifical seat in Trierzon and was chosen by the Serekela in the hope his political connections would benefit Kaldor. Instead, Rekela Hadan has become a vocal proponent of the "Reluctant Way." His theological beliefs manifest themselves in meticulous attention to dogma and ritual; he eschews the martial glory sought by his peers.

The Rekela's obsession with theology has greatly weakened Laranian military strength in Meselyneshire, and his message threatens to polarize the clergy. The suggestion that Laranians should put aside the sword and turn inward to prayer is abhorrent to those who see the Church as the shield of the kingdom and welcomed with glee by those who want to diminish its influence.

Nelafayn Hundred is an important part of Meselyneshire and Abriel is the Hundred Moot of Nelafayn Hundred and a commercial center of agriculture. Rekela Hadan ignores commerce and despises his duties as Bailiff of the Hundred, which he leaves to the Serolan, who is better suited to the task. Sir Maldan Harabor, Sheriff of Meselyne, has been a noted supporter of the Rekela since this undermines the political influence of the Serekela.

Abriel was once a desirable posting within the Church. This has changed since the arrival of Rekela Hadan and few now desire a posting at Abriel.

The Rekela's message has not found much support within the Order of the Lady of Paladins. In 716, the Rekela dismissed his shield chapter guards. Reblena Kjer Aphren of nearby Iversen keeps a close watch on the abbey to protect Abriel from the "folly of a good man." Little has changed at the large chapter house of Yaltako, located far from Abriel. Charged with patrolling Noron's Way, Reblena Tae Sarela works closely with Baron Pierstel of Tonot and the two are close friends.

Rekela Ilor Hadan

BRYND [K5]

Chyle Hundred, Balimshire, 245

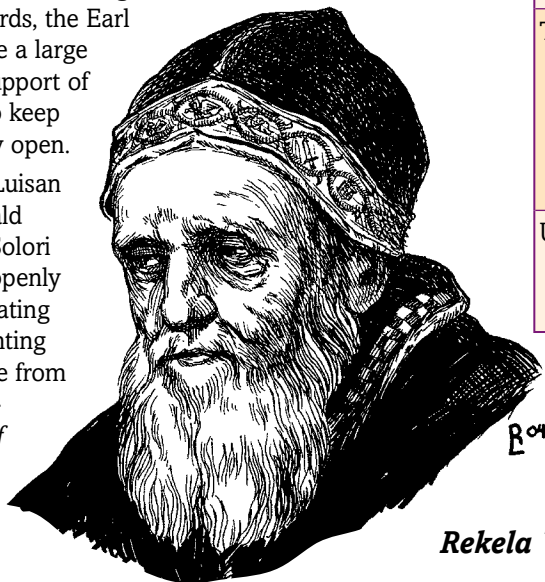

Brynd is the seat of the Rekela of Serelind and has played a prominent role in the history of Kaldor. After King Fierth died in 385, his son Uthred faced a baronial revolt. Rekela Juren Uberma of Serelind backed Uthred while the Rekela of Pagostra sided with the rebel barons. After the revolt was quashed, Rekela Juren mercilessly purged rebellious priests. The Church convened a council of Rekela in 389 under the close scrutiny of King Uthred. The council reorganized church lands, transferring Irtivir and Lyntord to the Rekela of Serelind and Halaina to the Serekela.

Rekela Verda Emerel is an elderly man in failing health. Sheryd Quathis, Serolan of Brynd, is the effective Rekela and possible successor. Rekela Emerel has been a steadying influence on the church, carefully mediating between the Serekela and the dogmatic Rekela Hadan of Abriel. When Larani calls him to Dolithor, even his rivals will grieve.

The Rekela once served the Order of the Lady of Paladins as a chaplain and fought to protect "his" men from the excesses of Serekela Kalabin Elendsa. The order has not forgotten his service and the Brynd Guard contains many old friends. The Rekela once commented that his only regret was not traveling to Tengela and has requested his heart be buried there. There is quiet discussion of which knight will undertake this task.

The large chapterhouse at Jenkald is also part of the diocese. Its troops regularly patrol the Silver Way in search of gargun and brigands. In 704, with the help of chapters from Yaltako and Vadan, the order destroyed a large gargun swarm in a glorious battle near the Guthe River. Afterwards, the Earl of Balim made a large donation in support of their efforts to keep the Silver Way open.

Reblena Luisan Kelic of Jenkald deplores the Solori Crusade. He openly advocates creating a Kaldoric fighting order, separate from the Melderyn-based Order of the Lady of Paladins.

CHOLAS [K5]

Cholas Hundred, Balimshire, 310

Cholas is the seat of the Rekela of Kephrus, a diocese that includes the barbarian-infested Chelmarch. The diocese's abbeys are well established and wealthy. Rekela Dariune is a second cousin of the Earl of Balim and a close confidant and supporter. Rekela Dariune joined the Church at a young age. His clan's wealth and power and the support of his mentor, Serekela Kynn, ensured his swift promotion.

Rekela Dariune was appointed in 709 to replace his corrupt predecessor. He is also the Bailiff of Cholas Hundred. Plaintiffs who tithe generously to the church generally find Bailiff Dariune's decisions satisfactory.

The Serekela is grooming Rekela Dariune as his replacement. This disgusts Rekela Hadan of Abriel, who abhors Rekela Dariune's lack of interest in theology and taste for political power. Rekela Dariune is polite to Rekela Hadan but privately considers him a liability who should be removed from office.

Rekela Dariune is a strong supporter of the Order of the Lady of Paladins. He is a generous patron of Vadan chapter house, commanded by Reblena Mulron Charyn. The Vadan Guard comprises 10 knights and 20 light foot and spends much of the summer at Swune, helping patrol the Salt Route. This has earned the Rekela the appreciation and respect of the Sheriff of Semeth, Sir Conwan Elendsa, and the Deputy Warden of Chelmarch, Sir Korus Ynel.

The Rekela makes a circuit of all of his abbeys at least once a year. He is also a frequent guest at the royal court in Tashal, the sheriff's court in Querina, and his cousin's court in Kiban.

The Rekela's political acumen and charm are well known and respected but he has made numerous enemies. He has survived three assassination attempts in the last two years. His personal guard has been doubled but efforts to discover who was behind these attacks have proven fruitless. The Earl of Kiban has offered a bounty of £100 for information leading to an arrest.

LEDYNE [K5]

Taniran Hundred, Thelshire, 255

Ledyne is the seat of the Rekela of Pagostra. The diocese was founded circa 160 at Lyntord. During the revolt against King Uthred, Pagostra was the center of the rebellion and many local priests backed the rebels. After the revolt was crushed, the Rekela and several priests were executed for treason. The church reorganized its lands in 389, stripping three abbeys from the diocese. Lyntord and Irtivir were given to the Rekela of Serelind, Halaina to the Serekela. The Rekela's seat was moved to Ledyne, much closer to Caleme.

Rekela Cerdan Bantire was appointed last spring and, at 38, is relatively young. He is a renowned scholar and historian and was the Serolan of Caleme before his appointment. The Rekela plans extensive travel throughout southern Kaldor to acquaint himself with Pagostran nobles and their loyalties.

A generous donation from the Serekela has been received to improve Ledyne Abbey. Plans to build a new cloister, library, and fortified chapter house have been drafted.

The Rekela is concerned about the disappearance of the Earl of Osel, a loyal parishioner. The earl's wife has requested his assistance in locating her husband. Lady Thilisa's father, the Earl of Vemion, has also asked the Rekela to inform him immediately if anything is learned about Earl Meleken's whereabouts.

The large chapter house at Nebulan is the center of the Order of the Lady of Paladins operations in Pagostra. Sir Remiu, the Reblena, is skilled and loyal but is also extremely ambitious; he was passed over when Sir Houla Artona was made Senior Reblena. He works closely with the Warden of Oselmarch and supports the baron's plan to build a keep at Oselbridge. Unknown to the baron, Sir Remiu believes the keep should be held by the order with himself as constable.

CHURCH OF PEONI

Peonians have little interest in holding land and are much amused by the territorial habits of their Laranian brothers. Pelnala is the name used in the Peonian church to mean High Priest or Priestess, or in this case Abbot or Abbess.

ERONE [J5] "TIRRALA'S HOMESPACE"

Tuselion Hundred, Semethshire, 395

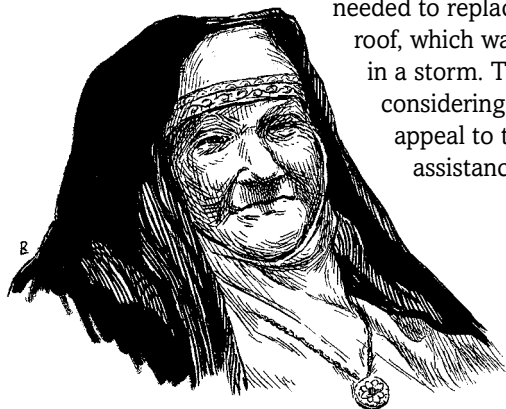

Erone Abbey, built in 335, is held by the female Order of the Balm of Joy. Velira Siwen, 51, abbess since 715, is a highly spiritual woman who leaves politics to Sulaplyn Brygyne of Kynge in the Tashal temple.

Located on the road to Tashal, the abbey has a reputation for excellence in the healing arts. No wounded or sickly folk are turned away. In addition to quarters for the priestesses, acolytes, and lay helpers, Erone includes a large temple, a manor house, and a large, overburdened hospital.

The famous Erone hospital is built upon natural mineral springs long considered therapeutic. The hospital produces a variety of oils, unguents, salves, balms, elixirs, and potions extracted and blended from all manner of efficacious herbs and fungi. The clerics gather these themselves or acquire them through trade. Sale of medicines brings much-needed silver to the abbey.

The abbey enjoys the patronage of many noble benefactors, including the king, the Baron of Ternua, and Lady Thilisa of Qualdris. Despite this support, Erone is constantly on the verge of financial collapse. It is in debt to the Qualdris usurer Tommas of Cuke for the funds needed to replace the hospital roof, which was damaged in a storm. The Pelnala is considering a personal appeal to the king for assistance.

BROMELEON [J6] "GRATEFUL PEACE"

Asolade Hundred, Oselshire, 115

Saint Bromel had no intention of founding a large community when he built his tiny cell in this place of solitude. Gradually others came and cleared land. The monastery was built by the Irreproachable Order in 420 with a grant from Aidrik III. It is a contemplative community that serves as a retreat for Reslava, ranking clergy, and high-born benefactors.

The peaceful clerics have never been attacked by the Pagaelin, who shun the site. The monastery sits atop a gentle hill and is enclosed by a thick, eight-foot high "palisade" of gnarled red rose bushes.

A mixed community of celibate clerics and lay families lives at Bromeleon. The clerics live within the monastery and all others live in cruck-framed longhouses scattered around the base of Bromeleon Hill. The stone church has a dirt floor and a steeply pitched roof. The monastery has a magnificent herb and vegetable garden. The clerics alternate long hours of labor in the garden and fields with periods of prayer in the chapel. The lay families have a communal lifestyle and assist the clerics and each other in all tasks.

Pelnala Rablar Oppias, 48, is an inspiring spiritual leader. He excels at spiritual and theological training and resolution of disorders of the soul. He enforces the ancient monastic Rule of Saint Eshaela, which prohibits speaking during daylight hours and requires a severe diet lacking in all meat, fish, fungi, and roots. Lay families are not expected to follow the rule.

The subordinate manor of Poynter is a hospice for lepers and their families. The abbey has established small holdings for the families to live and work. The isolation on the edge of Oselmarch serves them well. Six priests and 14 acolytes labor to make the manor self-sufficient and care for those too weak to work. There are no guildsmen at Poynter, so the priests take all their work to Bromeleon.

Kaldor is a land-locked feudal kingdom in eastern Hârn. Since its founding more than 500 years ago, external threats have been minimal but internal strife has been common. The current dynasty, Clan Elendsa, has sought to uphold the traditional principles of feudalism, chivalry, and royal justice. King Miginath Elendsa is popular with the common people because he has kept the kingdom prosperous and at peace.

King Miginath is in poor health and has never married, leaving the succession a matter of contention between three bastard sons and a score of nieces and nephews. Intermarriage with other noble clans and the granting of royal offices in exchange for concessions has created a complicated web of alliances that may discourage a civil war when the king dies. While he lives, the factions plot and scheme for advantages.

Much of the land claimed by Kaldor is controlled by tribal nations, some peaceful, others decidedly less so. The kingdom maintains two standing armies on the marches, but relations with the tribes are not always warlike. A few hardy miners, trappers, and explorers venture in the wilderness, and tribesmen are a common sight in border settlements.

The capital, Tashal, is an important economic hub. Caravans converge here from all corners of Hârn: from Orbaal down the Fur Road, from Azadmere along the Silver Way, from Thay and the Lythian continent via the Genin Trail, and from western Hârn by the Salt Route.

The Kingdom of Kaldor module is supplemented by other Columbia Games publications, including keeps, castles, and adventure sites, and provides a variety of opportunities for adventure.
