ASL SCENARIO FT180

VICTORY CONDITIONS: The side with the most VPs at game end wins. VPs are earned in 2 ways for Chinese GMD and in 3 ways for Red Chinese :

- 1) Both sides gain CVPs normally.
- 2) At the end of every Red Chinese Turn, both sides count the number of Stone Buildings that they control. Each Stone building is worth 1 VP. These VPs are cumulative from Turn to Turn.
- 3) Red Chinese gain Exit VP for each unit exited off either the north, east and/or south edge.

NINGGANG, JIANGAI PROVINCE, CHINA, 14 January 1929: On 4 May 1929 at Ninggang, Zhu De brought his forces together with Mao's 1st Army to form the 4th Worker's and Peasant's Army. Zhu came with about 1000 troops and Mao had between 1200 and 1300 troops. Zhu and Mao (Zhu-Mao) then laid the framework for the first independent communist region. Eventually, as Zhu-Mao recruited more men, some of the local warlords took notice of their growing competition in the Red Army. The army, growing too large (8000 men) to be supported by the local area, Zhu-Mao divided the army into the 4th Army and the 5th Army. The 4th Army moved out leaving the 5th Army to defend the Soviet base for as long as they could before following the 4th Army.

HISTORICAL RESULT: The 5th Army came under attack by the warlord Wu Shang and his Hunan Chinese troops. Under constant pressure the 5th Army finally broke and scattered into the mountains. Wu Shang then broke up the fledgling Soviet community destroying most of the mountain village. It would be over 20 years before Mao could return to the mountain top where he had established the first rural Soviet in China.

NORTH OF TROGSTAD, NORWAY, 13 April 1940: In April 1940, at the beginning of the invasion, Norwegians were not able to stop the german advance. Invaders took full advantage of the element of surprise. The small defensive strongpoints were overwhelmed or easily encircled. Near Trogstad the german detachment "Gutsche" attacked a village to clear any roadblock and to secure the area. Captain Gutsche bet his men they would not meet strong enemy resistance. He was unaware that Major Orre defended the village deploying his company to vigorously fight the invaders.

VICTORY CONDITIONS: The Germans win at game end if they Control all hill hexes.

ISHUN, CRIMEA, 5 October 1941: In October 1941, several unsuccessful raids carried out by the Soviet Air Force from Sevastopol against the Romanian oilfields convinced Hitler to conquer the Crimean Peninsula. The mission was given to General von Manstein's 11.Armee. The first difficulty lay in the Russian position on the Perekop Isthmus. Obviously, the 51st Army had fortified this natural 5 mile wide route to the south of the peninsula. Impossible to bypass the obstacle, it had to be taken with a frontal assault. ... At 5:00 AM on the October 5th, German artillery unleashed a rolling thunder barrage over enemy lines.

- Germans 5²-4-8/2-3-8s are Assault Engineers (H1.22).

HISTORICAL RESULT: At 5:30 AM, German infantry went over to the attack behind this barrage. Several Russian positions had already been destroyed. Although engineers and Sturmgeschütze had been deployed all along the line, they could not be everywhere to assist the Landsers. Within the 22.Infanterie-Division's sector, Infanterie-Regiment.65 occupied a fortified crest line but had to stop its advance: its neighbor from the I.R. 47 had been halted by wire and it had to call up I.R. 5, in reserve, in order to resume their advance. It would take eight days for the Landsers of the 11.Armee to breakthrough and reach Sevastopol.

ASL SCENARIO FT183

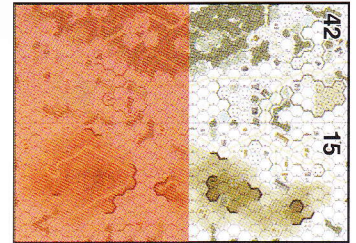

VICTORY CONDITIONS: The Romanians win at game end if they have amassed more CVPs than the Partisans and if the Partisan stronghold (see SSR2) is Romanian-Controlled/Rubbled/Ablaze.

WEST OF FEODOSIA, CRIMEA, 4 December 1941: Partisans harassed the Axis invaders as soon as they entered the Crimean peninsula, so the 4th Romanian Mountain Brigade was sent in early December on anti-guerrilla missions in the Yaila Mountains. By sheer luck, it encountered partisans defending one of their bases...

- Romanians can Massacre. Captured Partisan units at game end count as CVPs against the Romanians.

HISTORICAL RESULT: Under horrendous winter conditions, the Romanians “succeed” in their missions, destroying 114 “bandit camps” and killing 1850 “partisans”, nearly all unarmed civilians. Manstein still cited the Vanatori “exploit” in one order of the day of the 11.Arme.

ASL SCENARIO FT184

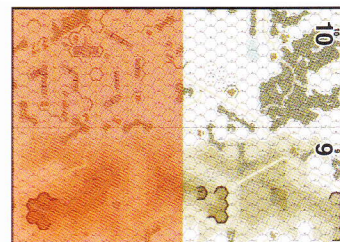

VICTORY CONDITIONS: The Russians win at the end of any Player Turn if they Control all five level 3 hexes of Hill 654.

NEAR SEVASTOPOL, CRIMEA, 23 December 1941: While the harsh winter was sticking the remainder of the Ostheer to the ground, Hitler ordered Manstein to seize Sevastopol before the end of 1941. On the other side, the Coastal Army was still consolidating its positions after the first German failure in November. On December 17th, despite the exhausted state of the troops and the lack of heavy artillery at his disposal, Manstein attacked. He left the "garrison" duty for the rest of the Crimean Peninsula to several dispersed units. The Germans managed to infiltrate the northern perimeter and compelled the Russians to withdraw to a second line of defense, but everywhere else the defenders held their ground.

HISTORICAL RESULT: Generally speaking, the Romanian troops played a secondary role, but on the 23rd, a joint action of the 170 ID and the Vanatori de Munte led to the main success of the offensive. Indeed, they succeeded in taking Chapel Hill, the key position in the second sector of the fortress and repelled all the counterattacks. Nevertheless, the attackers' elan was brought to a halt and three days later, the Red Army landed in force on the eastern shores of the Crimean Peninsula, definitively stopping the assault towards Sevastopol. On January 18th 1942, General Mihail Lascar, the commanding officer of the "Brigada 1 Munte," was awarded the Ritterkreuz for his victorious battle at Chapel Hill.

STUG OF WAR

1H30

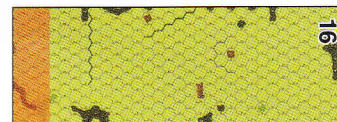

ASL SCENARIO FT185

PARPACH, CRIMEA, 15 January 1942: Sturmgeschütz-Abteilung.190 had fought its way through the Crimea since the beginning of the campaign. The StuGs proved to be invaluable throughout the campaign, both in support of infantry and to spear-head open country dashes. In the latter role, they proved surprisingly effective against Soviet armor due to the StuG's superior armor and command control. By January, the situation in the Crimea found the Russians standing tough at opposite ends of the peninsula, at Parpach and Sevastopol. With Sevastopol besieged by infantry, Manstein directed his mobile units to clear the rest of the peninsula. On the morning of January 15, the veteran tankers of S.A. 190 were ordered to support the infantry in a large-scale assault on the Parpach line. As the fighting developed, large holes were carved into the Soviet line and the StuGs move to exploit them.

BOARD CONFIGURATION:

Only hexrows A-CC are playable.

VICTORY CONDITIONS: The Germans win at game end if they have amassed ≥ 4 VPs. VPs are only awarded to the German as follows :

NEAR UVAROVE, CRIMEA, 9 May 1942: On 8 May 1942, the German 11th Army attacked the Crimean Front defending the Kertch peninsula. The force ratio seemed to favour the powerful Soviet forces but they were poorly deployed and not very well-led. Generaloberst Manstein planned to use one corps to deceive the Russians into thinking the main blow would fall in the north and, at the same time, striking in the south with his Schwerpunkt comprising the 22.Panzer-Division. Formed in 1941, the 22.Pz.Div. combat debut in March 1942 in Crimea was poor, partly because the « main battle tank » of the division was the obsolete PzKpfw 38 (t). But, in the spring, the division trained to improve its efficiency and received some of the latest PzKpfw III and IV with long-barreled guns. On 8 May, the German offensive, codenamed « Trappenjagd » - bustard hunt – surprised the Russian defenders. The diversion functioned well and, the next day, Manstein committed the 22.Pz.Div. to the southern breach.

HISTORICAL RESULT: The 22.Pz.Div. was one of the two motorized units of the axis forces with the Groddeck Brigade, a mixed German-Roumanian unit with some elements from the division. With powerful artillery and Luftwaffe support, the 22.Pz. Div. plunged into the Russian defence, overrunning the stunned rifle divisions. But, near Uvarove, a Soviet tank brigade tried to counterattack. The new Panzers wreaked havoc among the light armor and the KV were too few in number to change the issue. With the remnants of the 56th Tank Brigade fleeing east, the Panzerdivision continue its advance.

HORNOSTAÏVKA, CRIMEA, 13 May 1942: On May 8th 1942, the 11th Army began the attack towards the Crimea Peninsula. The operation code named “Trappenjagd” was turning out to be extremely successful and soon managed to encircle the poorly led Russians while several Axis mechanized columns were reaching the rear areas of the defenders. Within a few days, the disaster was over the Red Army tried to save as much as could be saved. One last line of resistance was organized west of Kertch, in order to give the retreating troops as much time as possible. Unfortunately, many units of the Crimean Front were poorly trained and couldn’t overcome the initial shock of the German assault. Nevertheless, a few units such as the 77th Rifle Division, a former mountain division, fought bravely. Despite some gallant actions, the Axis forces reached Kertch by May 13th.

HISTORICAL RESULT: Both sides fought desperately. The Germans, lacking sufficient AFVs, used a lot of Beute Panzers, former French tanks equipped with short-barreled 37mm guns. The Russians committed a training battalion partly equipped with several vehicles captured from the 22. Panzer-Division earlier during the war. With better coordination and properly supported by artillery and by the Luftwaffe, the Germans manage to seize the strongpoints and push back the defenders to Kertch. On May 14th, the first Landsers entered the outskirts of the city. Even though the last pockets of resistance were only mopped up by the 20th, the Crimean Front had lost 175,000 KIA and 100,000 wounded. The Axis suffered 100,000 KIA and 100,000 wounded.

HORNOSTAÏVKA, CRIMEA, 13 May 1942: On May 8th 1942, the 11th Army began the attack towards the Crimea Peninsula. The operation code named "Trappenjagd" was turning out to be extremely successful and soon managed to encircle the poorly led Russians while several Axis mechanized columns were reaching the rear areas of the defenders. Within a few days, the disaster was over the Red Army tried to save as much as could be saved. One last line of resistance was organized west of Kerch, in order to give the retreating troops as much time as possible. Unfortunately, many units of the Crimean Front were poorly trained and couldn't overcome the initial shock of the German assault. Nevertheless, a few units such as the 77th Rifle Division, a former mountain division, fought bravely. Despite some gallant actions, the Axis forces reached Kerch by May 13th.

SCHULZBACHER HILL, EAST OF BALAKLAVA, CRIMEA, 5 June 1942: On the previous day, the jägers of the 28th Light Division had tried to crack the first lines of Russian defense, east of Balaklava. The fighting had been intense for hillocks known as Vermillion Hills, and the Germans had managed to gain a foothold within the Russian defenses. On June 5th, the jägers turned their attention to a more massive hill, known as Schulzbacher Hill, in order to enhance their position but the men holding the hill were none other than the NKVD, and they would prove a tough nut to crack.

HISTORICAL RESULT: The jägers pushed forward but the NKVD troops resisted fanatically. The defensive network was just too tight, and the NKVD men were too determined to be pushed off the hill. The Russians fought hard and long, turning their AA guns against the incoming assailants. The 109th Rifle Division commander ordered renewed mortar strikes on the Germans, which continually wore off the advance force. After two days of this, the Germans finally withdrew to their starting point. This section of Sevastopol defences had held.

NEAR SEVASTOPOL, CRIMEA, 29 June 1942: The Germans had decided to unlock the soviet defence system by resorting to a bold move: the landing of units ashore directly behind soviet lines. To achieve this, von Manstein had a secret weapon up his sleeve: fast assault boats. While the italian navy was making a diversionary manoeuvre, the Germans landed their troops ashore. Incredibly, the Soviets did not detect the move until well after the assault troops had started landing. Then, all hell broke loose.

ASL SCENARIO FT190

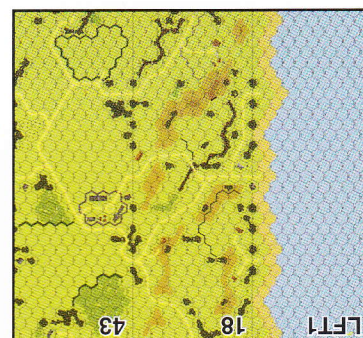

ELTIGEN, SOUTH OF KERCH, CRIMEA, 5 December 1943: The Eltigen bridgehead, created after the landing of the Russian 318th division south of Kerch in October 1943, earned the nickname of 'Land of fire' after the 1.5 months of continuous bombardment by the besieging Germans and Romanians. The Romanian's 6th Cavalry Division and 3rd Mountain Division were tasked with reducing the bridgehead. The assault was scheduled for 4 December and the Romanian's were reinforced by one German StuG battalion and strong German artillery. The attack began at 5:00 after a five minute artillery barrage. Only the right wing of the Romanian forces managed to advance. On the left, the Soviets put up a heavy resistance, especially near the state farm and on hill 56.7, where they had a pillbox. The next day, the attack continued with the main push made from west to east, towards the state farm and the lighthouse south of Eltigen.

ELTIGEN, CRIMEA, 6 December 1943: In early October 1943, Axis forces left the Kuban bridgehead under intense Soviet pressure. The coastal army immediately tried to gain bridgeheads in Crimea, exploiting the small distance between the Caucasus and the Kertch peninsula. On 3rd November, two Soviet landings occurred, surprising the Axis defenders. The northern landing was within artillery range of the Taman Peninsula, foiling all German-Romanian attempts to reduce it. However, the southern landing at Eltigen was out of normal artillery range and the Axis forces began a blockade with mines and light naval forces. By December, the position seemed doomed. General Teodorini's 6th Cavalry Division was in charge of the operation with troops from the 3rd Mountain Division and dedicated German artillery and air support.

HISTORICAL RESULT: The Romanian general mounted a large diversion in the south with the Vanatori de Munte, launching the main assault from the west. The cavalymen began their holding attacks on 3rd December and, the next day, the main attack began, delivering great success. The Soviet resistance was bitter and the Romanian battlegroups found it was no easy going. On 6th December, with support from a heavy machine-gun battalion, artillery and Stukas, the Vanatori de Munte attacked the main pocket of resistance from the north. They succeeded in overrunning it next day even as some defenders broke to the north trying to join the other bridgehead. The Romanians lost nearly 900 men but counted 1,200 Soviet dead, 1,570 prisoners, 25 AT guns and 38 AFVs, some serviceable.

SOUTHERN BUG RIVER, NEAR ALEXANDROVKA, RUSSIA, 22 March 1944: From February through March, the German Sixth Army conducted a fighting retreat from the Dnepr to the Southern Bug River. Heavy fighting reduced the 46th Infantry Division to a Kampfgruppe. While lead elements of the battlegroup found safe paths west, flank and rear guards fought off Soviet attacks that threatened to cut them off from the rest of the army. Upon reaching the Bug, the 46th conducted a passage of lines through the 15th Infantry Division that protected the crossing site. The Kampfgruppe marched up to their positions opposite Aleksandrovka on the west bank. On the night of the 22nd, they saw their neighboring unit, the 15th Infantry Division, retreat from the shore opposite them and move to cross the river to their right. Soviet troops occupied their old positions on the eastern shore. Until the 15th could reinforce them, the 46th's troops at the bow-shaped shoreline, which the Germans referred to as a "knee," would be vulnerable to attack from three directions. When the night fell, defenders fired flares periodically to spot any Soviet attempts to cross the river. Carefully positioned machineguns and artillery supported the thin defensive line. Suddenly, the Germans saw the flooded river filled with Soviets clinging to logs while others rowed large rafts. Could the defenders hold out while reinforcements marched to their rescue?

3. Night Rules (E1) are in effect. The base NVR is 3 hexes (E1.1), with Overcast skies and a Full Moon (E1.2). For both sides, only crews and leaders may use starshells. The Majority Squad Type (E1.6) for both sides is Normal. Despite not being the Scenario Defender, the Germans do set up as per E1.2-1.22, except they can deploy three squads.
4. All Soviet SW and ordnance suffer from Ammunition Shortage (A19.131) when not located on board 44. While on the eastern bank, the Russians may not fire through or into any location containing any Russian unit that is located on the western bank [EXC if the firing unit has height advantage]. LOS is blocked if it touches any part of the hex containing a friendly unit. Note this restriction does not affect fire through a Russian unit while it is in a river location.
5. All Russian units are assumed to have passed their Swimming TC and are considered to be Rafting (E6.41) and are therefore armed. Swimmers may not fire starshells. Drift drs only occur on the odd numbered turns. No Straying occurs [E1.53] in the river. Despite the M>6 of each 122 ART (E5.122), each Gun can be portaged by a large raft, while doing so the raft may also portage 10 PP. The guns are considered under low ammo status (D3.71) while on a raft and when on the western shore.
6. The Attacker may declare HtH-CC (J2.31), provided all units of that side are neither pinned nor ambushed.

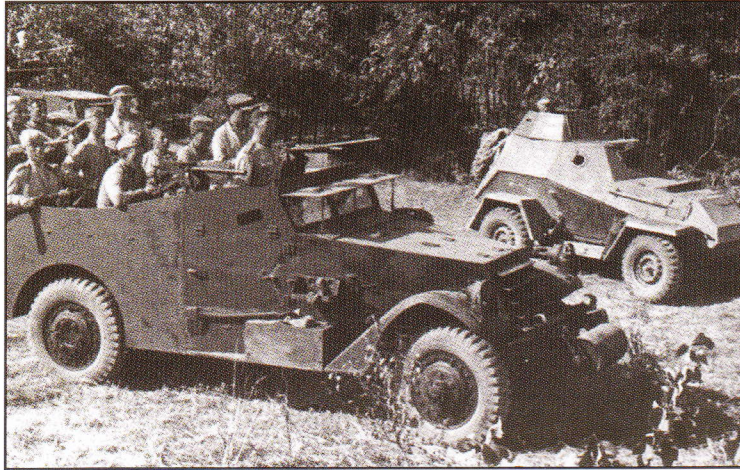

HISTORICAL RESULT: Spearhead elements of the Third Ukrainian Front's Soviet 57th Army scanned the German held shore. Crossing into this bow shaped shoreline would allow Soviet troops to easily secure their northern and southern flanks. Captain Abaev, Commander of the 1st Rifle Battalion, conferred with his supporting artillery commander Captain Petr Mikhin. They decided that there was no time to waste waiting for boats to be brought up or bridges to be constructed. Troops scrounged enough wood from the doors, boards, gates, and logs from a nearby village to build large rafts for the guns, mortars, and machineguns. When darkness fell, the crews dragged their rafts to the water and loaded them with the 122mm guns and only five boxes of ammunition for each one. Riflemen brought out the logs they would use to swim across the river with their waterproofed ammunition. After Abaev gave the signal, the soldiers reluctantly entered the cold water. The riflemen clung to their logs with one arm while they paddled with the other. Gun crews on rafts used shovels to row across the water. The current made their progress across the river uneven. Soviet heavy machine guns set up on the eastern shore fired on the Germans in an attempt to pin them down in their trenches. The Germans fired starshells which turned night into day. German fire shot some of the helpless swimmers who were swept away by the river's current. When the Russian machine gun crews saw their comrades land on the opposite bank, they ceased fire so as not to kill their own men. Artillery fire blew Mikhin and one of the guns off the raft but he made it ashore. The other artillery piece was unloaded on the western bank to provide direct support to troops clawing out a shallow beachhead. Like alligators, Soviet infantry leaped into the enemy trenches. A desperate hand to hand struggle raged as German troops defended the west bank. By the end of the night, the Soviets had secured their foothold on the west bank. German artillery fire on the east bank cut off the Soviets from reinforcements. They would have to defend their small beachhead until they were relieved.

But these Axis troops were also trapped ! In April 1944, Marshal Tolbukhin 4th Ukrainian Front and the Coastal Army – in Kertch – were ready. The 17th Army possess neither the armor nor the reserves to check its powerful forces. Moreover, the Red Army already controlled some bridgeheads in the northern and eastern part of the peninsula. The Soviet offensive began on 7 April with diversionary assaults. The fighting was bitter but, two days later, the 51st Army succeeded in penetrating the last defence line of the Roumanian 19th Division on the southern part of the Sivash laguna. Soviet engineers quickly laid pontoon bridges and, by 11 April, the 19th Tank Corps, Tolbukhin's exploitation force, was released.

SPECIAL RULES:

- EC are Moderate with no Wind at start.
- Russian AFVs may not set up in building hexes. The Russian M3 SC(a) carries a 3-2-8 HS.
- Romanian 4¹-4-7/2-4-7s are Assault Engineers (H1.22).

HISTORICAL RESULT: The Soviet breakout left only one "shelter" for the Axis units, the « fortress » of Sebastopol. But the race was not even between the Soviet motorized spearheads and the Axis mostly foot – or horse – mobile units. Nevertheless, most of them kept on fighting. When the mauled 19th Division, trying to break south, encountered Soviet units in Krasnovardiske, it succeeded in repulsing them with a strong frontal assault ! Too few to check the Romanians, the Russian mechanized advance guard was forced to fall back. The 19th Division entered Sebastopol a few days later, having suffered catastrophic losses.

ASL SCENARIO FT194

VICTORY CONDITIONS: Provided they have exited ≥ 7 EVP by the west edge, the Romanians win at game end by amassing more VP than the Russians. Romanians score EVP off the west edge and CVP. Russians score CVP only.

Near ALUSHTA, CRIMEA, 15 April 1944: On April 7th 1944 the great offensive of the Red Army began with the objective to free the Crimea Peninsula of Germans. In the east, the Coastal Army was attacking from the Kertch bridgehead but was held off by the V Armee Korps. But on the 9th, the 4th Ukrainian Front broke through the Axis lines around the Sivash Marshes. The German Korps withdrew in order to avoid encirclement in the peninsula. First in charge of the anti-partisan duty, the Romanian Mountain Corps was ordered to ease the withdrawal of the other units by holding the key crossing points in the Yaila Mountains. A detachment with 2 battalions and several artillery batteries blocked the enemy vanguard close to Simferopol before withdrawing on the 15th towards Alushta, where it had to embark to reach Sevastopol. But the Romanians discovered upon arrival that by the end of the morning, the German motorised rearguard and the ships that were supposed to wait for them had already sailed away! At the beginning of the afternoon, they had no other choice but to walk and leave to Sevastopol.

BOARD CONFIGURATION:

Only hexrows A-P on board 11 are in play.

Elements of the 63rd Tank Brigade, enter on Turn 2 as Passengers on 44GG5:

Reinforced elements of Batalioanele 7 & 23, Vanatori de Munte [ELR: 2], set up on road hexes on/between 11C6-44A5-44H8 with two squad-equivalents OR one Wagon (with Gun and crew) per hex (see SSR1 & SSR2) {SAN: 2}:

SPECIAL RULES:

- EC are Moderate with no Wind at start. Unpaved roads exist on Board 44 between C6-I9 and T8-BB4 included.
- Romanian Guns start in tow (C10.1) with crews as Passengers. Romanians use Russian ATRs with no Captured Use penalties.
- Russian AFVs must set up in Motion with VCA facing the same direction.

HISTORICAL RESULT: The Partisans were just a mere nuisance, but the Coastal Army had at its disposal a powerful and mobile force: the 63rd Tank Brigade, equipped with British and American tanks. Four days ago, it had already dispatched the bulk of the Romanian 6th Cavalry Division in the Kertch Peninsula. Around 15h30, two Romanian battalions just managed to repel the very first Russian AFVs, but the follow on deliberate attack "en force" literally eradicated the Vanatori de Munte and only one officer and two soldiers were able to reach Sevastopol. The Romanian command could do little more than protest and argue that their soldiers had just been forgotten...

REPAIR SHOP AT DANGEUL CASTLE

🕒 2H30

ASL SCENARIO FT195

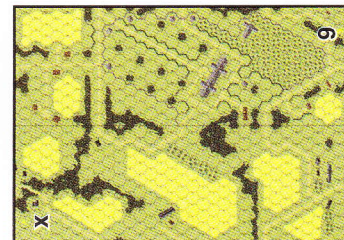

VICTORY CONDITIONS: The Americans win at the game end by amassing $\geq$ the VPs amassed by the Germans. Both sides earn CVP normally (see SSR3). Each truck/Kfz is worth 3 VPs. The side with most Good Order squad-equivalents in building 6M5 at game end earns 5 VPs.

DANGEUL, FRANCE, 10 August 1944: The I./Pz-Rgt.33 established its headquarters in the village of Dangeul on the 9th August. The regiment was deployed in the village and major crossroads on the south side of Dangeul. Despite heavy losses from 9.Pz-Div. ambushes, the Allies manage to quickly advance and soon Dangeul was under attack from the south by Task Force Bartel of the CCA of 5th Armored Division and from the French 2nd Armored Division. To take the defenders by surprise CCA-Task Force Burton was ordered to launch an attack on the village from the west. The attack aimed at taking the castle on the western part of Dangeul where the veteran Pz-Rgt.33/9.Pz-Div. had its headquarters and a mobile repair warehouse. The surprise was not on the side that expected it when the first Pz IV J opened...

- The German AFVs are considered Elite for ammunition purpose (C8.2) and equipped with Schürzen (D11.2). German AFVs are not Recalled if their MA is disabled. The German trucks/Kfz may not start/move on Turn 1. Only $\leq$ 2 German trucks/Kfz may start/move on Turn 2. Good Order German units may exit the board along the north edge without counting as CVP.
- One US AFV may be recorded as equipped with a Gyrostabilizer (D11.1).
- The German player may use HIP for $\leq$ 2 vehicles, these lose HIP/? as if they were Guns. Two German trucks must be recorded as Ammo Trucks (E10.5).

HISTORICAL RESULT: A heavy fight ensued and lasted several hours. In the exchange of fire 3 Shermans were destroyed and the rest withdraw. In the whole fight for the village the Pz-Rgt lost 22 unarmored vehicles and 2 Pz IV J. In danger of being surrounded, the 9.Panzer-Division withdraw during the night to the north and Dangeul was occupied on 11th August by the Allies. Two days later the regiment although often victorious against the 2nd and 5th Armored Division has been nearly 100% destroyed by the these units and complete Allied aerial superiority.

ASL SCENARIO FT196

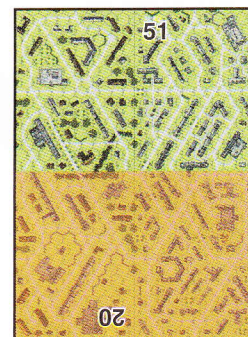

VICTORY CONDITIONS: The Russians win at the game end if there are no Good Order German Infantry MMC (Encircled German Infantry are considered not in Good Order) and no German AFV with functioning MA ≤ 2 hexes of Spittelmarkt Platz (hexes 20Z5-Z6-Y6-Y7).

BERLIN, GERMANY, 28 April 1945: By this time in the war, thousands of Soviet troops were already fighting in Berlin, where the remnants of the German Armies were in their final days. Among many other units, the 11th Tank Corps prepared itself to continue its drive toward the Reichstag. Its earlier probes of the Spittelmarkt by tank and assault engineers demonstrated that they needed to take this critical road junction or find a way to bypass the German defenders. Experiencing severe casualties in house to house fighting, the Soviet command issued orders to create light storm groups to better organize and execute armored operations in Berlin. After several unsuccessful probing attacks of the Spittelmarkt, the 11th Tank Corps would launch another attack consisting of the new storm groups.

LFT#13 - 2012

SPECIAL RULES:

- EC are Moderate with no wind at start.
- Before setup, each player (Russian first and alternating thereafter) must place 5 Rubble counters then 4 shellholes counters in any eligible hexes. The players do not roll for Falling Rubble. No Rubble counter may be placed on a non-building hex unless there is a Rubble counter adjacent to that non-building hex.
- Russian 6-2-8/3-2-8s are Assault Engineers (H1.22).
- The 64th Guards Tank Brigade is not considered Elite for Ammo Depletion numbers.

HISTORICAL RESULT: The Soviet forces gathered on Seydelstrasse, south of Spittelmarkt Square. The exit from this street into the square was barricaded and manned by German troops. The tanks took up positions close by while the engineers blew up several barricades, allowing the infantry to quickly leap across the square and reach Nieder Wallstrasse on the north side. The surprise and effectiveness of this coordinated attack apparently caught most of the Germans off guard, except some Waffen SS troops and two alert Sturmgeschütz III that tried to engage the Soviets but were quickly knocked out. Two days later, Hitler would commit suicide in his Führerbunker.
